Maryland's Highest Court Hears Jaeger Zoning Case by Marjorie Bergemann

The Court of Appeals, Maryland's highest court was the setting on Thursday, Jan. 21, for the hearing concerning the Jaeger case. The panel of five judges sat in Annapolis to decide what will become of the controversial tract of 76 acres that is a virtual enclave within the federal government's Greenbelt Regional Park. The appeal before the court seeks to reverse Judge Bowie's deeision, rendered nearly a year ago, to rezone the land for high-rise and other apartments.

The U.S. government was represented in the case, having declared its interest by filing an "amicus curiae" or "friend of the court" brief. Berwyn Heights was represented by citizens who filed a similar brief . Jerrold Powers, lawyer for Jaeger, argued the case for high-rise zoning. He moved to dismiss the city of Greenbelt, represented by City Solicitor Thomas Brooks, as well as William Avrutis, a lawyer who represented himself, on the grounds that they were not aggrieved parties. Powers presented the viewpoint of the owner and would-be developer of the tract under discussion.

Greenbelt's Argument

Brooks presented Greenbelt's argument, outlining the reasons in favor of retaining the land in a nural-residential classification and stating the justification for Greenbelt's remaining in the case as a bona-fide aggrieved party of record. He was followed by Avrutis, who also argued for his acceptance as an aggrieved party, and in addition raised several interesting points. Among them was the concept that the burden of proof must rest upon the applicant for rezoning, not upon the opposition; that the greatest good of the greatest number must be safeguarded, and that the park must serve the people of the county, state and nation rather than be used solely to relieve the pressure of 7500 people dwelling on 76 acres of a virtual enclave

City Traffic Record Good

Police Chief William T. Lane reported that during 1964 the police department investigated 14 accidents at the entrance to Klein's (62nd Ave.) and 3 at the Cunningham Drive entrance to Beltway Plaza Shopping Center. This does not include accidents that were investigated by the county and State police departments and the police department of Berwyn Heights.

Also investigated by Greenbelt police were 46 accidents in Klein's parking lot. Other accidents along Greenbelt rd. included 15 at Kenilworth Ave., 9 at Edmonston rd. and 4 at Lakecrest Drive. The grand total was 91 out of 206 accidents reported for the entire city dering

The Greenbelt Library Story by Dorothy Sucher

HAS THE LOCAL BRANCH A PLACE?

(This article is the third in a series on the Greenbelt library.) County library authorities point with justifiable pride to the recently-opened Regional Library in Hyattsville, the first building ever constructed by the Prince Georges County Memorial Library system. They endorse the national trend toward a reduced number of large centralized libraries with superior facilities, and a second Regional Library in the southern part of the county is probably next on the construction agenda of the county system. Where does the smaller community library, such as the Greenbelt branch, fit into the picture?

Library authorities seem to agree that the community library is needed, but there is little unanimity on precisely how big a community should be to rate a library. "By and large the community branch should serve a population of about 15,000-20,000, but this figure can vary depending on local reading habits and other factors," says the 1959 Master Plan of Libraries, a study of the libraries in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties by the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission. County Suggests 10,000 Minimum

A minimum population of 10,000 (somewhat less than Greenbelt's present population) is often suggested, and this seems to be the present policy in Prince Georges County. "Any library trying to serve less than a population of 10,000 cannot give good service," said County Library Director Elizabeth Hage recently. "The small library is not going to disappear from the face of the earth. I think what our branch libraries have done is terrificbut there still is that lack of depth, both in collections and services. The community library must serve conveniently more than just the single town it happens to be located in. We are not recommending that anything less than 10,000 square feet be built." The present Greenbelt library is about 1,000 square feet in size.

What special services does a community library provide? First, and perhaps most important, that intangible thing, the "personal touch." Librarians and users of the library know each other, often by name. The librarian is in a position to guide readers to books in their fields of special interest, often without even needing to be asked. Children receive individual help and guidance from a friendly, familiar person. For children and adults alike, the library is an extension, in a way, of "home"-at any rate, of home-town-not a large, impersonal institution to be visited only on special occasions or to do a special piece of research; a culture-symbol where one tiptoes across vast carpeted expanses, afraid to speak above a whisper. If one wishes to foster a love

Children Plunge Through Ice, Rescued After 45 Minutes

Two children were rescued from Greenbelt Lake by passersby last Thursday when the ice on which they had been playing broke under them. Robert Foster, 13, and his 12-year-old sister Debbie, of 446 Ridge (Lakeside North), were treated for exposure at Prince Georges Hospital after their 45-minute immersion and sent home in satisfactory condition several hours later.

Greenbelt Lake had been partially frozen for several days, although not yet certified safe for skating by the Recreation Department. The Foster children and an unidentified third child decided to walk across the lake about 5 p.m. on Jan. 21. They made it, but when they tried to walk back, the ice broke under Robert about 50 feet from the shore.

Debbie fell into the icy water when she tried to pull him out. The third child ran away. The water was deep, and the Foster children clung to the edges of the ice. It cracked beneath their weight, however, whenever they tried to climb out.

Their cries for help went unanswered for three-quarters of an hour, until they were heard by Jack Taylor, 125 Greenhill, who had just driven into the lake parking lot with his 2-year-old

Rescuers Toss a Rope

Moments later, a pickup truck driven by Oscar Greer, 5918 Gallatin St., Hyattsville, also pulled up. Taylor and Greer went some 25 feet out on the ice, despite the childrens shouted warnings, "Dont step on the ice or you'll fall in too." tossing a rope the remaining distance, the men were able to pull Debbie and Robert to safety.

They carried the shivering children to Greer's pickup truck, and drove them to the nearby firehouse. Rescue squad members transported the children to the hospital, administering oxygen along the way. "We'd been yelling so much we just didn't have any breath left," Robert said the next day.

No Swimming

The children did not notice any warning signs posted, although, ironically, they did observe a "no swimming' sign. They thought the ice was safe because it was covered with skating marks made the previous day (Inauguration Day). The Foster family moved to Greenbelt in September, and has never lived near a body of water before, except in summer.

A permanent sign near the parking lot lists all park and lake regulations, including a prohibition a-gainst skating unless the ice has

City Improves Lake Park

Improvements have been made recently to the city-owned parkland around Greenbelt Lake, and more are planned for the future. Work is progressing at two ends of the lake, the southern - formerly swampland-and the western, a low-lying area behind the dam. The latter has been filled approximately half-way by the developers of Boxwood Village and Country Estates. When completed, the area will probably be used for recreation.

At the southern bay of the lake (near Charlestowne Village and the new homes on Lakeside Extended), the swamp has been dredged and a well-defined shoreline cut. The bay is now about five feet deep. A sanitary sewer line formerly exposed some four feet, runs through the shore area. It has now been covered with fill-dirt.

NOTICE OF POSTPONEMENT

City Manager James Giese has announced that the meeting which had been scheduled for the purpose of interviewing applicants for the various advisory boards was postponed due to a conflict with a meeting of the Maryland Municipal League on state legislation. The City Council will consider setting another date for interviews at its next meeting.

Post Office Lobby To Close At Night

Beginning February 1, 1965, the lobby of the local post office will be closed at 6 p.m. and re-opened at 6 a.m. the following morning.

A large post office box will be placed in the center of the mall for 24 hour deposit of mail.

been declared "safe" by the Recreation Department.

Police Chief Lane has recommended that "no skating" signs be placed near the shore when conditions are hazardous. City Manager James Giese commented that the appearance of the ice can be deceptive, since varying depths and the existence of several springs create weak spots that are difficult to detect.

"Any body of water is a potential hazard," stated Giese, "Just like any busy street. Parents must teach their children to stay away from them."

Many Police Calls

Normally, the police department patrols the lake only periodically. Last week, however, there were many calls from residents regarding children on the lake, especially on Wednesday. Patrolmen also responded to calls from Springhill Lake, despite the fact the police department is not formally responsible for the private lake within that development.

According to the city manager. no funds have been provided for a continuous watch on the lake. Alternate spells of warm and freezing weather have created a particularly difficult problem this winter.

Many more children than in previous years have been attracted to the lake, as the result of extensive new housing developments nearby. The most critical periods, of course, are school holidays and the hours from 3:30 to dark on weekdays.

About the Rescuers

Jack Taylor has lived in Greenbelt about a year. He is married and the father of two children, works at the U.S.D.A. Beltsvile Swine Branch doing swine breeding research, and comes from Fairfax County, Virginia.

Oscar H. Greer of Hyattsville has lived in the area for about 10 years. He is married and has three children. Greer, a North Carolinian, is a superintendent at the Haven Construction Corp. in Belts-

Police Chief Lane has written each man a personal letter, commending them and expressing the city's thanks for their efforts.

Award to Financial Report

Mabel Kandler, treasurer-finance officer for the City of Greenbelt, has been notified that her department was awarded a Certificate of Conformance from the Municipal Finance Officers Association of the United States and Canada and the National Committee on Governmental Accounting. The basis for the commendation was the "Annual Financial Report of the City of Greenbelt for the Fiscal Year Ended June 30, 1964."

In a congratulatory letter to Miss Kandler dated Dec. 21, the Municipal Finance Officers Association noted that the report met the association's high standards for financial reporting

Nearly 1,300 financial reports had been reviewed by the MFOA this year. Of these, Greenbelt was one of 149 United States municipalities receiving recognition.

Danger: Thin Ice

The hazard of partially frozen ice was brought home to us all last week by the tragic deaths in Fairfax County, as well as by the narrow escape of two Greenbelt children who fell into Greenbelt Lake and were finally rescued after 45 minutes in the icy water. Our deepest gratitude goes to their rescuers, Jack Taylor, 125 Greenhill, and Oscar Greer of Hyattsville.

Parents are urged to make sure their children keep away from the ice. When Greenbelt Lake is safe for skating, the Recreation Department will post notices to that effect. Similar notices at Springhill Lake will be posted by the management. At any other time, the ice should be considered dangerous.

Out of the Mouths of Babes

It was a busy weekend at our home. There were floors to be mopped, beds to be changed, furniture to be dusted and clothes to be washed. Under these conditions, I, a working mother of four lovely children, am not at my most relaxed state of mind.

From upstairs, my five year old called down, "Mom. How do you make love and engagement?"

"Huh?" was about all I could say before she added, "and Mom, how do you make babies?" The rest of the family was silent.

"Well honey," I started, "I don't think I'm ready to tell you just now.'

"I think I know," she said. The silence in the house prevailed as we all contemplated what her next words would be. "By marriage." she said. A unanimous sigh of relief followed from both upstairs and downstairs. I thought I could hear the older children giggle.

No more than 30 seconds had passed when the same sweet voice called down, "Mom."

"What?" I said, somewhat anxious as to what else her thoughts might bring forth.

"Can I have a peanut butter and jelly sandwich?" End of story.

Art Comes to Greenbelt

An enjoyable exhibition entitled "The World of Washington Art" is on display at S. Klein's department store, where it will continue through Feb. 13. Two handsome canvasses by Jack Perlmutter are the most attractive works in the show. Perlmutter's palette runs to black, white, and greys, relieved by touches of more vivid tones. Crowded human shapes rim vast open areas littered with unidentifiable shreds of debris-kites? crumpled paper?-which give the paintings a metropolitan air suggesting that urban renewal is urgently needed.

I liked Harvey Moore's bronze bust, "Portrait of Barbara," which is particularly vital in profile. The chin is thrust forward, and the heavy curves of the hair sweep strongly backward. I thought the polished highlights on the lightlymodeled eyelids were "tricky" and detracted from the general effect. Moore's ingenious "The Mirror" will satisfy your curiosity - not once, but twice-if you have ever wondered what the wrong side of a cast looks like.

Ed McGowin's untitled piece paint-spattered plexiglass over spattered board, the two clamped together at the top by a hunk of orange crate (and where did he find an orange crate in this day and age?)-will amuse the kids, who will probably insist on emulating it as soon as they get home.

James Twitty's pleasing "Beachscape" suggests drying foam with heavy acryllic stippling. An understated but effective composition and a subdued palette give this painting an atmosphere of desolation that makes an emotional ap-

Two large works by Samuel Bookatz in Conte crayon reveal a skilful draftsman with a compassionate outlook. The deliberately tentative placement of the faces gives the pieces a sketchy air oddly at variance with their size. Engaging, in a minor key.

Richard Lafean's "Mottled Green Stoneware Bowl" brings irresistibly to mind the idea of a still-wet bowl which fell to the ground and was dented; an unfortunate studio accident redeemed when the artist cleverly punched a matching dent in the other side. Lafean's other ceramics, however, reveal a deliberate fondness for squeezing pots before they are fired. Too bad, for the decorations and glazing are skilful, and Lafean's smallest bowl is stained a most attractive oxblood tone.

Other works include paintings, photographs, sculpture and ceramics in a variety of styles. Prices range from $15 to $2,000.

Speaking Sternly . . . by David Stern

WHAT HAPPENED IN HUE

Some time ago millions of wellfed Americans, scanning their morning paper while sipping their coffee and listening to the cereal pop, snap and crackle, were angered by the news of the burning of a U.S. Library during a riot in Hue, South Vietnam.

"Here we are," many thought, 'paying our taxes to send books to these backward nations, and all they are capable of is riot and arson"

Well, we finally have the real s'ory from our special correspondent in Southwest Asia and, as you may expect it, it differs completely from what the papers reported.

It all started with the announcement by Gen. Maxwell Taylor that another regional library soon would be established in Saigon

The board of the "Hue Library Association" was indignant.

"For twenty years our library has been stuck in a little room belonging to a Buddhist shrine,' complained Mr. Fat-hi, a local Chinese merchant, "and every time the issue of a new library comes up we are passed by".

Ling-her, a tall Buddhist monk, declared: "They already have more than enough regional libraries in Saigon. Last time I was down there I visited several of them and none is as crowded or as intensively used as our small branch in Hue." The board's discussion was long and stormy; one thing everybody agreed on was that there was little hope in yet another appeal to the library authorities. The final call for action came from Mrs. Chu-ser, a petite Vietnamese housewife.

"Why don't we burn down the existing library?" she asked.

As everyone listened in stunned silence, she went on: "This will attract a great deal of attention in the international press" - Mrs. Chu-ser has always been known for her awareness of the power of the press - "then the authorities will be forced to build a brand-new library, since there'll be nothing left of the old one."

A short debate followed and soon everyone supported Chu-ser's suggestion. There was one problem left; would the Buddhist authorities go along with the burning of shrine property? On this point, however, Ling-her reassured the rest of the

"The building now housing the library", said he, "is old and rickety and deserves to be condemned anyway. If the library people hadn't wanted it, we'd have torn it down long ago.'

This, then, is the truth about Hue. All the people there really want is a new library.

of books-and not an awe of books-there is much to be said for the familiar community library, even if its collection leaves something to be desired.

And then, of course, proximity. When the library is nearby, people drop in often. People can even walk there, and in Greenbelt, they do.

A handbook printed in 1963 for the use of staff members by the Prince Georges County Memorial Library states that in Prince Georges County: "Most people ride to reach a public library. A few school children may walk to a nearby community (or regional) library . . . but the great majority of library borrowers, adult and children, travel by car. Mobility is a chief characteristic of the county population."

But Greenbelters Walk

This statement is based on a transportation survey conducted by the county system in the fall of 1962, and while it is true for the county as a whole, it is not true of Greenbelt. The figures for the transportation survey within Greenbelt show that only about a third of the users of the library (35 percent) came by car; the rest walked (56 percent) or rode bicycles (9 percent).

Another service the community library can offer is to stock books of special interest to citizens in the area. "We do have a reading public in Greenbelt that is likely to pick up the unusual," Mrs. Margaret Paris, former Chief Librarian of the Greenbelt branch, commented recently. "There are many excellent readers who come to the library with long lists, and it isn't just that they read the new novels-they're good critics, too." For a number of years, books that were not in general demand but merited inclusion in the county system were usually placed in Greenbelt, because the reading public here was most likely to call for them. Now, of course, such books are placed at the Regional, although if a second copy were purchased, it might be sent to Greenbelt.

Finally, a local library represents the desire of the citizenry to to offer its inhabitants facilities which their town and symbolize the values they believe in. The county library's handbook, quoted above, states: "We would note that any community which considers itself a desirable one in which to live will provide library support above the minimum."

Greenbelters have consistently done so in the past, and are eager to continue doing so in the future.

PARENTS, Greenbelt had a near-tragedy last week at the lake when two youngsters fell through the thin ice. Remember, SIGNS ARE ALWAYS POSTED when the lake is safe for skating. It is a good practice never to let young children go to the lake unaccompanied AT ANY TIME.

When Joseph Taylor, 11-L Ridge was discharged from the Army at the end of World War II, he started working at the Army Surgeon General's Office. Now, with more than 34 years of Federal service, he is looking forward to his retirement from the Medical Statistics Agency.

A native of Brockton, Mass., he came to Washington in 1930, as an employee of the Department of Agriculture. The three Taylor children were born while the family was living in the Peace Cross area, battling the Anacostia floods every time it rained. In 1937, Taylor became one of Greenbelt's original settlers.

Retirement will provide time for a long desired trip to California to visit the Taylor's son, Bruce J., of Pasadena, and daughter, Sharon (now Mrs. Bob Alleman) of Los-Angeles. Their other daughter, Mrs. Doreen Flood, and their only grand-daughter, Angelina, live with them.

Lou and Lucille Lushine won handsomely at last Friday's duplicate bridge session, racking up at .633 score. Tying for second place with a .550 score were the combines of Robena Mathers - Adelade

Peace Corps to Test

An opportunity for Washington area residents to test their aptitudes for Peace Corps service will come at 8:30 a.m., Saturday, Feb. 13, at 1900 E Street, N.W.

The opportunity is the Peace Corps Placement Test. It is not passed or failed, but simply indicates where your greatest potential lies. The Peace Corps Questionnaire which must be filled out and brought to the exam unless previously submitted, tells what an applicant has done in the past. But the placement test is aimed at showing what he or she CAN do in the future. Applicants do not have to register for the test ahead of time.

The Peace Corps Questionnaire can be found in Post Offices. On college campuses, they are available at college placement centers or the offices of Peace Corps Liaison officers, who are members of the faculty or college administration. If you can't find a Questionnaire, write the Peace Corps, Washington, D.C., 20525.

Recovery Group Meeting

The Greenbelt Recovery Group of Recovery, Inc., has changed its meeting night to Thursday of each week, from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. at the Jewish Community Center. This is a permanent change.

Recovery Inc., is an organization of former mental and nervous patients. It is an after-care system of self-help, which after many years of research study and treating patients, was developed by the late Abraham A. Low M.D., a prominent Chicago psychiatrist and neurologist and formerly Assistant Director of the Psychiatric Institute of the University of Illinois Medical School. Its object is to help prevent relapses in mental patients and to forestall chronicity in psychoneurotic conditions.

Recovery groups meet on a regular weekly basis. At these meetings trained leaders who are former mental or nervous patients, follow a format set down by Dr. Low. Panel discussions are of trivial irritations which, unless properly handled, can pile up and lead to vicious cycles of temper symptoms and fears resulting in physical and mental discomfort. Participation in the group discussions is limited to those studying Dr. Low's book "Mental Health Through Will Training." However, family, friends and the public in general, who are interested are welcome to attend and observe these meetings and to join in a question and comment period at the conclusion of each
