Deadline for City Funding Of Greenbelt CARES Extended

by Sandra Barnes

The pressure was off the city council to immediately commit funds of $10,000 out of its 1974 budget for Greenbelt CARES, the community counseling service which has as its major goal the establishment of clear lines of communication between parents and their children. At the public hearing on Monday night, Nowember 26, the city learned that the Governor's Commission on Law Enforcement, which provides, with Federal monies, the major source of revenue for CARES, changed its December 6 deadline to a mid-March deadline for knowing what the city's share of funding will be.

Nevertheless, councilmen listened with much sympathy toward the program outlined by the CARES director, staff members and others in the audience which numbered about 30.

Two Budgets

CARES technical consultant and guiding light. Dr. Leo Walder, presented two budgets to council, an ideal budget of $161,000 and a realistic budget of $68,000. City manager James Giese explained that the latter figure was more realistic because federal money for the program was only committed for a three-year period after which the Governor's Commission might drop youth counseling as a viable program for crime prevention. government, Giese explained, was now more interested in committing funds toward changes in the courts and in the penal system, as well as other worthwhile projects, all of which vie for the same Law Enforcement Administration

In view of the anticipated low budget, councilman Charles Schwan expressed his concern as to how CARES could provide a functioning, productive service and maintain a quality staff on the low salaries (Bob Field, the administrator, works on an $8,000 salary while Walder himself works for $10,000). Walder explained that there was a great deal of dedication on the part of the staff, but he did anticipate a substantial turnover in counselors, most of whom earn nothing while others earn a "pittance". He also doubted that he could meet all the commitments to his program if the larger budget was not adopted. For example, would he be able to expand the counseling service, increase the training program, hire a person skilled in vocational and guidance counseling? "We feel the pinch daily," he affirmed, "but we can do something with it (the $68,000)."

The underlying question throughout the hearing was how much should the city put into a social service program? All present seemed to agree that there was a real need for the service CARES was providing and that the organization was doing some good. But, should the taxpayers commit a substantial portion of the city's budget to this organization, much in the manner of funding the recreation department, and would it eventually fall into the city's umbrella of services with probable total commitment of funds. This was a question the councilmen were not prepared to answer.

Best of its Kind

Giese indicated that the CARES budget would have to be revised and he would prepare, along with CARES director, another budget to present to council by January. As the city's representative overseeing the management and progress of CARES, Giese looked with cautious favor on the achievements of the counseling service, calling it one of the best of its kind which he had knowledge of.

Mayor Richard Pilski voiced the sole discordant note with his insistence that if Greenbelt put money into the program, only Greenbelters should be admitted for counseling. This would not include children bused in or those working in Greenbelt. The other council members, however, disagreed, saying that as long as the major share of the funds was being provided by the federal government, through the Governor's Commission, that these people could not morally be turned away.

Various people spoke in favor of CARES. Chairman of their board of directors, Jim Cassels, noted that the behavior modification method used in the counseling program was successful in dealing with families. and the most efficient and economical way of working out problems in the community. He also listed some of his goals for the future. He hoped CARES would adopt a Shelter Care facility giving temporary homes to young people; Foster Homes providing longer term care; a New Friends program, similar to Big Brother, which would be a liaison between the counselors and the clients; a Work Center giving youth the opportunity to earn money in meaningful jobs; a Volunteer Service, coordinating all the volunteer services in the community to provide the proper person for the job; a Family Relations Officer, offering training to police officers in working with families with problems.

He also hoped to work toward a Family Relations Court which would supplant the Domestic Relations Court and the Juvenile Court, which he said, considers economic wealth during divorce proceedings, but does not give serious consideration to the welfare of the children. "Two thirds to three fourths of the kids (involved in Greenbelt CARES) come from single parent families," commented.

Cassels stressed the need for a balanced program, not just working with delinquent kids, but with the other serious problems facing the family.

Board member Bruce Bowman stressed the importance of the finding of jobs for youth. Dr. Baxter-Collins, who works with CARES as a counselor and works in a psychiatric hospital full-time, stated that he knows the consequences of people's lives when they failed to get proper professional services early in life. Greenbelt, he said, has the opportunity to "circumvent the crises that other communities have" through Greenbelt CARES.

GHI Board Discusses Fuel Oil, Subleasing Problems

by Sid Kastner

The regular Greenbelt Homes, Inc. board meeting on Thursday night centered around issues forced on the corporation by the nationwide fuel shortage. The fuel supply prospect for next year was reported on by manager Roy Breashears; and the related 19% increase in monthly charges, which was put to the membership in yesterday's special meeting, was debated between Director Hugh O'Donnell and the rest of the board.

As a separate item, the frequency of requests by members to sublease their homes has increased recently because of the shortage of mortgage money on the part of prospective purchasers. The corporation's criteria for granting such requests was therefore reviewed by the board.

At Wednesday night's meeting the membership refused to OK any increase in monthly charges greater than 10%.

Breashears reported that the corporation's present oil supplier indicates that there will be a 15% cut in GHI's allocation for 1974, but that he expected this would still be enough because of the economics gained by being able to use cruder No. 4 oil, with the new burners now being installed. He quoted the supplier's price as being 25.48 cents per gallon as of November 20, and in response to a question by director T. C. Byerly agreed that it was 22 cents per gallon as recently as November 3.

Chairman Jim Smith noted that the corporation does have the "ability to buy" oil because it will be able to exchange present stores of No. 2 oil for No. 4 oil, and will be economizing by paying less for the No. 4 oil. Breashears also said he has contacted State authorities, who have assured him that oil will be supplied if GHI should run short.

Stronger apprehension over the rising trend of oil prices was expressed, however, by director O'-Donnell who stated "if the $83,000 increase in fuel oil prices over the past three or four months is an indication of what's to come, I'm concerned about whether our income is going to keep up with expenses."

Director Tom White took this as a pertinent argument for the 19% increase in charges put to the membership, but it turned out later in the meeting that O'Donnell was personally opposed to the increase as not being workable.

O'Donnell's position became evident when the agenda for Wednesday's special meeting was being discussed, because he then proposed making a minority report to the membership which would emphasize "a planning process to explore alternate ways of raising income to finance this increase in our budget."

The idea of such a report did not sit well with the majority of the board, who felt it would undercut the main proposal for increasing monthly charges. After much discussion, the weary board agreed to hold the meeting over till Saturday evening to clarify O'Donnell's ideas. (At the Saturday meeting, agreement was reached on a detailed cost-savings program as proposed by O'Donnell, who then withdrew his proposal for making a minority report.)

Subleasing

In connection with the question of whether to grant subleasing requests that have come up because of members' inability to sell their homes, Breashears earlier in the meeting reviewed the existing policy on the matter. At present, subleasing privileges can only be granted if a member's job temporarily requires the member to leave Greenbelt, or if temporary hardship conditions such as illness exist. The manager proposed the following additions to the criteria for eligibility, for a member unable to sell his house:

(a) The member's home must have been on the market for sale for a period of not less than three months.

(b) The member must have been willing to accept an offer at the appraised price, if such an offer were made.

(c) The selling member must have been willing to sell under the corporation's plan of "rent with option to buy," or take back an assignment in an acount that could equal 80% of the required down payment.

Director Byerly noted that the appraisal in part (b) should be made at the time the member puts his house up for sale. After a maximum period of one year was imposed on such subleases the recommendation was referred to the corporation attorney.

FIRST FEDERAL NEW BUILDING

First Federal Savings & Loan Association of Annapolis announced the opening of a new office at 7910 Cherrywood La, in the Beltway Plaza Shopping Center.

Cable TV Comm. Established

by Jim O'Sullivan

A resolution to establish an advisory committee on cable television was passed by the Greenbelt city council at their December 3 meeting. Introduced by councilman Thomas X. White the resolution sets up a seven member committee consisting of five citizens appointed by council, one member of council, and the city manager or his representative.

The duties and functions of the committee are broad. It is asked to consider such matters as: the pros and cons of municipality awarded franchises or a municipality owned facility; the evaluation of existing ordinances where CATV is operating or planned; the performance requirements of the operator; the availability of public use channels: compatability with other systems; regulatory aspects; requirements for eligibility to bid on a franchise; and other factors deemed relevant by the committee. An interim report is called for by December, 1974.

In the discussion of the resolution, councilman Gil Weidenfeld suggested that the duties of the committee be limited to an evaluation of the pros and cons of the city awarding a franchise or itself owning a CATV facility.

White explained, however, that he did not see this as the committee's role, namely determining whether the city should consider such a system. White saw the committee as performing an educational function. "I see this as an investigatory body to search out all the information they can on cable television," White said.

After slightly amending the resolution, the CATV committee, with a broad assignment of duties, was established by the council on a unanimous 4-0 vote. Mayor Richard J. Pilski was absent from the meeting, and the session was chaired by Mayor Pro-Tem Weidenfeld.

The city is accepting resumes from Greenbelt citizens who would be interested in serving on the CATV committee.

PRAB Report

The council heard a report from the Park and Recreation Advisory Board (PRAB) recommending the continuation of the trampoline program, Joseph Wilkinson, chairman of PRAB, said that a new trampoline, 7 feet by 14 feet in size would be required. Wilkinson pointed out that this larger trampoline, costing approximately $1,500, provides a much greater degree of safety than smaller models. Wilkinson said that in the ten years of operation of the program with more than 3,000 participants there have been no accidents. The report also recommends that qualified instructors supervise the trampoline program and that guidelines be established for safe use.

Deposits of City Funds

In response to a question from councilman White, City Manager Giese said that he is preparing a charter amendment which will allow the city to deposit funds in savings and loan associations. Such institutions are presently excluded by the charter.

Potential Hazards

Councilman Weidenfeld called attention to several potential hazards throughout the city. Weidenfeld pointed out that the driveway entrance to the Beltway Plaza parking lot near the intersection of Cherrywood Lane and Greenbelt Road creates traffic problems especially during rush hours. He recommended that traffic be prohibited from using the opening to leave the parking lot. Weidenfeld also pointed out some hazards on the pathway between Periwinkle Court and Greenhill Road, and called attention to some dangerous excavations in that area by children.

Citizen Requests

The Council also heard two citizen requests. A letter from Judith O'Sullivan asked the city to take steps to improve the safety of school bus stops in Springhill Lake. Council directed the city manager to investigate this situation and to make a study of school bus stops throughout the city to determine where safety improvements might be made.

Scoutmaster Baker of Springhill Lake Troop #1253 appeared before the Council along with six members of the troop to ask the council to establish a campsite somewhere within the city of Greenbelt.

Energy Crisis??? To the Editor:

It is ridiculous for Federal, State. County and Municipal officials to urge the average working stiff to cut back on use of heating oil and gasoline and then encourage, not just permit, construction of such unnecessary facilities as the Largo Sports Arena and the "luxurv" apartment complex known as Greenbriar.

How much energy will be required to provide the lighting, heating, cooling and television coverage of events at Largo? How much energy to run 1.193 washers and dryers for Greenbriar? In "luxury" apts. each one has its own laundry facility.

How much gasoline to deliver 13,000 persons to Largo on Dec. 1, '73? How much fuel to power the bulldozers, cranes and other equipment required to construct Greenbriar?

Our developer-owned politicians speak with forked tongues. They have one set of rules for the poor and middle income majority and another for the wealthy who can contribute $10,000 to one political campaign. (That sum, according to cur Metropolitan daily newspapers. was contributed to Gov. Mandel's 1974 campaign by the Kay family)

One event at Largo will consume more electric power than all the residential Christmas lights normally used in Prince Georges County during the entire holiday season. Whe heating of Largo for a single event will consume an amount of fuel that would supply all of Greenbelt for the same period of time. Energy Crisis????

Holiday Gift For Joe

To the Editor:

December should be a time to re joice for all, but for the Roland Family it is a time of sadness. Their son and brother Joe is very ill and all the love in the world will not help him in his fight for life. Medical bills are piling up and have to be paid but right now all they should be caring about is Joe.

When our son Gary was hurt in 1957 we were faced with unending medical expenses but how could we worry about these when our hearts and thoughts were so full with the well being of our son. During this dark period in our lives a bright light shone through and many beautiful people in this city took most of the financial burden off our shoulders for which we are eternally thankful.

Now I pray that you can do something for another family in need of your love and help. Most of you have already helped but could you do more by adding Joe to your holiday list, by making out a check or taking your donation to the Greenbelt Credit Union for the Joe Roland Fund. The Rolands' hearts are heavy with love for their son, let us eliminate their added burden by CARING. Mary E. Ford
