City to Consider Changes To Roosevelt Center Design

(This article, the first of a series relating to Sharon Bradley-Papp's proposals to renovate the Roosevelt Center Mall, relates information about her critique of the existing mall. Future articles will describe, in detail, the three proposals.)

by James Giese

The Greenbelt City Council again has plans to renovate the Roosevelt Center mall on its agenda. It has received three alternative plan proposals for the original commercial center of the planned community. Prepared by Sharon Bradley-Papp, landscape architect consultant to the city, the plans will be formally placed before the council at Monday's regular meeting. At that time, the council is expected to establish a procedure for the review of the proposals.

The three plans range from making minimal changes to the mall as it now exists to making more substantive changes. Also included with the plans are a list of project objectives, a compariin 1937 with how it looks today and a critique of existing condithat the existing Bradford pear trees should be replaced with new trees, because the pears are now at an age when their branches are apt to break off and fall on unsuspecting by-standers. In addition, their heavy, dense branches obscure the view of the statue and commercial buildings.

"In comparison, the architect lists a large number of disadvantages to the mall's current condition"

The landscape architect first presented three alternative plans to the council in August of last year. These proposals, some of which included replacing the pear trees and making other major changes to the mall, resulted in a lot of negative comments from citizens who spoke to councilmembers knocking on doors during their campaigns for re-election in November

This led to Bradley-Papp presenting a list of seven objectives tions. Bradley-Papp has argued in December and to council be-

Objectives for Mall

Sharon Bradley-Papp, landscape architect consultant for the city on the Roosevelt Center Mall project lists seven project goals for the mall

* To offer a range of design options for the mall from a minimalist repair approach to a full scale renovation effort

* To research the original design of the mall and determine which elements from that period should be brought forward into a new design.

* To leave undisturbed the areas of the center region which have been recently renovated.

* To maintain a treeshaped open character in the mall area, with ample room for festivals and general circulation.

* To re-establish original Greenbelt landmark views, such as to the mother and child statue and to the buildings in the center.

To strengthen the link between the mall and the recreation areas.

* To keep it simple!

hearing on the alternative plans was planned for January, but instead, Bradley-Papp was asked to revise the plans to meet some of the criticism received and scale down the scope of work involved. It is these revised alternatives that are now being pre-

1937 Plan

In 1937, the mall looked quite different (see plan). The commercial center was smaller in size with the only buildings those next to Centerway-the Co-op building and medical center did not exist, nor did the parking lot to the rear. The mother and child statue was well to the rear of the commercial buildings, surrounded by lawn that continued to a large wooded area well behind the statue. There were four large planting areas bordered by privet hedges and containing grass areas and shrubs. Large concrete and wood benches backed up against the landscaped areas. The paved areas were plain concrete. A few lights on the adjacent buildings See MALL PLAN page 9

Is TRIM Here to Stay Or Will It Be Repealed?

by Konrad Herling

"Should TRIM be repealed?" and "Should All County Fees and Tax Increases Require Approval by Referendum?" are the two questions that Citizens for Greenbelt will tackle at its membership forum on October 17, at 8 p.m. As usual, the site will be the Greenbelt City Council Chambers and all citizens are invited. These questions, "Question B and Question I' on the election ballot, will affect the County's tax base and how it taxes its citizens. The results of the questions will be decided by County voters on November 5 in the upcoming election.

Historical background and interpretations of TRIM's impact will be a large part of the presentation made by four panelists, two on each side of the issue. Supporting repeal of TRIM will be County Councilmember Steve DelGiudice and former Bowie City Councilman, Walter Planet.

Planet is also a member of the newly formed organization, PRIDE, which consists of members of the fire and police departments as well as the Chamber of Commerce. Opposing Question B (maintaining the tax cap on mortgage rates) and supporting Question I to require voter approval for tax and fee increases are County Councilmember Walter Maloney and Prince George's County Civic Federation President Robert Callahan.

Barry Solomon, veteran leader of Citizens for Greenbelt, will moderate the forum. As usual, citizens who attend the forum will be invited to ask questions of the panel. However, CFG urges citizens to refrain from "making speeches" so as to allow maximum input from citizens and a fairer chance for the panelists to respond. Refreshments will be offered for what promises to be a lively evening.

Exhibit Reflects Greenbelt

by Virginia Beauchamp

Not surprisingly, the majority of folks who turned out for the opening reception for the new exhibit, "Images and Voices of Greenbelt," were long-time residents of the city. They were no doubt hoping to find pictures of old friends and associates, as well as memorabilia of years they themselves had lived through in Greenbelt. "But," as Greenbelt pioneer Lucille Howell put it, 'we've all changed so much it's hard to recognize people any more.

This reporter thought she found former News Review staffer Bess Halperin, looking vivacious in one picture of life in Greenbelt in the early days; but never having known Bess when she was that young, one could not be sure. Sadly, Bess herself did not live to see the exhibit. She died only within the last two weeks.

they may have been carrying. in other words, did they have good character?

Hand-work

Many of the artifacts on display recalled the coping skills of people during the depression years when Greenbelt began. Many were beautifully sewn garments-for infants, children, and adults. A handsome black coat, made from a Vogue pattern also displayed, could be worn proudly today. Nothing about it looked "home-made." Yet its creator would have saved many dollars See MUSEUM page 4

What Goes On

Saturday, Oct. 5, 1 p.m., Senior Citizens Annual Forum, Community Center Multipurpose Room Monday, Oct. 7, 8 p.m., City Council Meeting, Municipal Building

Designed and arranged by FOGM curator Ann Denkler, who has been interning at the Smithsonian, the exhibit focuses on Greenbelt's history decade by decade. Of particular interest was the 1937 check-off form used in initial interviews with the applicants.

These interviews took place in the applicant's then current residence, and a major component of the questionnaire dealt with the adequacy of that environment. (At the time, housing in the Washington-Baltimore area was in such short supply that many people lived in substandard facilities. Thus a major purpose of the construction of Greenbelt was to add to the available housing stock.)

Another major concern was, of course, the credit standing of the applicants and their personal attitudes toward paying off debts

Room at the Greenbelt Community Center Dr. Paoletti will explore the relationship of clothing of the 1930s and 1940s to regional and national history. For example, how do corduroy knickers and flowered dresses reflect cultural values?

Prior to the lecture, the exhibit, "Images and Voices of Greenbelt," will be open in the gallery at the Community Center from 6 to 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Paoletti is director of graduate studies in the Department of American Studies, University of Maryland. The free lecture, sponsored by the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum (FOGM), is made possible, in part, by a grant from the Maryland Humanities Council through funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. For additional information, contact FOGM at 301-507-6582.

SHL Activist to Relocate

by Kerana Todorov

As determined as ever, longtime Springhill Lake resident Sara Bomberg has decided to start a new chapter in her life and move to Florida to be closer to relatives. "I've finally made up my mind that I will like it." Sara Bomberg said.

Bomberg, who did not take this decision to move in haste, said she probably will do volunteer work.

A Greenbelt resident since the early 70's, Bomberg retired from the American Red Cross in 1974 after 30 years of service. She is a volunteer at heart. For 17 years, she volunteered with the Springhill Lake Good Neighbor Watch Group. In fact, she was a co-founder of the group in 1979 after someone tried to snatch a purse near her apartment.

"Sara was, our raison d'etre from the very beginning," said Springhill Lake resident and group member Jette Brett. Brett, who has known Bomberg since 1979, said that Bomberg would forego social events in order to devote time and energy to keeping the interest alive in the group. She acted as liaison between the watch group, Springhill Lake management and Greenbelt's police department. "She really kept the program going," Brett said. Greenbelt Police Officer George Mathews, who attends all training sessions of the watch group, said Bomberg is a very determined, very strong woman.

Besides volunteering for the watch group, Bomberg has also helped with foreign students at the University of Maryland, the Hillel library and other organizations. She has also led exercise classes for seniors.

During her long career with the Recreation Department of the ARC, Bomberg said she never had to lift a finger when she moved from assignment to assignment. The ARC made all the arrangements and provided all the furniture. This year, however, Bomberg had to plan the move to Florida herself.

Bomberg, who worked in Army hospitals in the United States, Japan, the Panama Canal Zone, Germany and Vietnam, loved the Red Cross. "I've been absolutely spoiled, I mean spoiled," Bomberg said.

She loved the dedication exemplified by the volunteers. She recalled the ARC volunteer in Kyoto, Japan, who came to work in spite of a tornado and severe rain because she had promised to play bingo with the patients. Bomberg still keeps her ARC uniforms, which she said she always wore with great pride and properly ironed. As she was going through her papers, Bomberg said she may donate a letter to ARC. It is a letter dated Jan. 1, 1945, written by a "sailor boy," named Sam Levine, of Massachusetts, thanking Bomberg and the ARC for all their work.

self was later honored for her work in founding and maintaining by constructing it herself. Even a man's undershorts had been made, not bought.

Two items in use in the first kindergarten at Greenbelt Elementary School had also been created by an early resident-a handcrafted wooden "electric stove" and a "refrigerator." Both were of course childsized. If not in the same room, at least these were displayed in the same building where they once had engaged the interests of those early children.

Central Themes

The underlying theme of the exhibit was the strong sense of community and the civic activism which, together, have formed the hallmark of life in Greenbelt since its beginning in 1937. Some of the major issues of decades past that drew residents together were on display-the formation of the food cooperative and then the housing co-op when the town was sold; the rallying around in support of Abraham Chasanow when he was charged in the red scare of the McCarthy years; the rallying around again in support of the News Review when it was sued for libel.

As Janet Parker pointed out, however, only Chasanow was named in the exhibit piece. News Review staffer Izzy Parker-creator of many wonderful cartoons for this paper in the early years-was also charged, and also cleared.

Ironically, the theme of activism had found reinforcement the very day of the opening; on Saturday, September 28, when the Washington Post carried a front-page story focusing on the city's history as a greenbelt town and its current opposition to the construction of a Department of Agriculture administra-

Wait Till Next Spring by Isaac Robinson

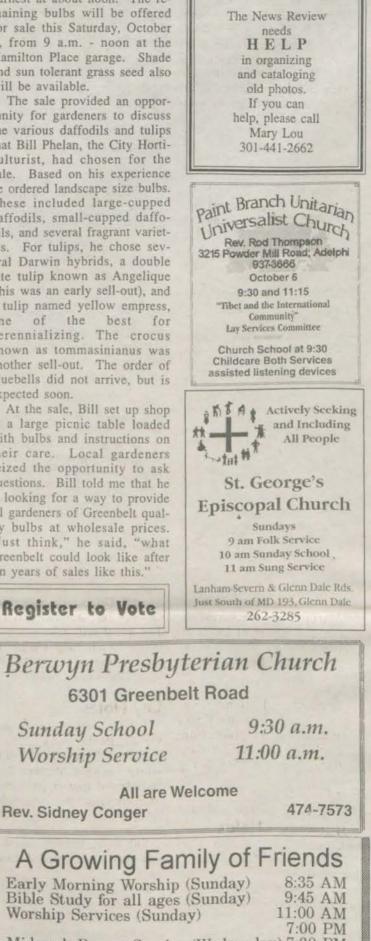

Last Saturday, under black clouds that threatened rain, GHI (Greenbelt Homes, Inc.) volunteers sold about half their stock of almost 3,000 daffodil bulbs before the rain came down in earnest at about noon. The remaining bulbs will be offered for sale this Saturday, October 5, from 9 a.m. - noon at the Hamilton Place garage. Shade and sun tolerant grass seed also will be available.

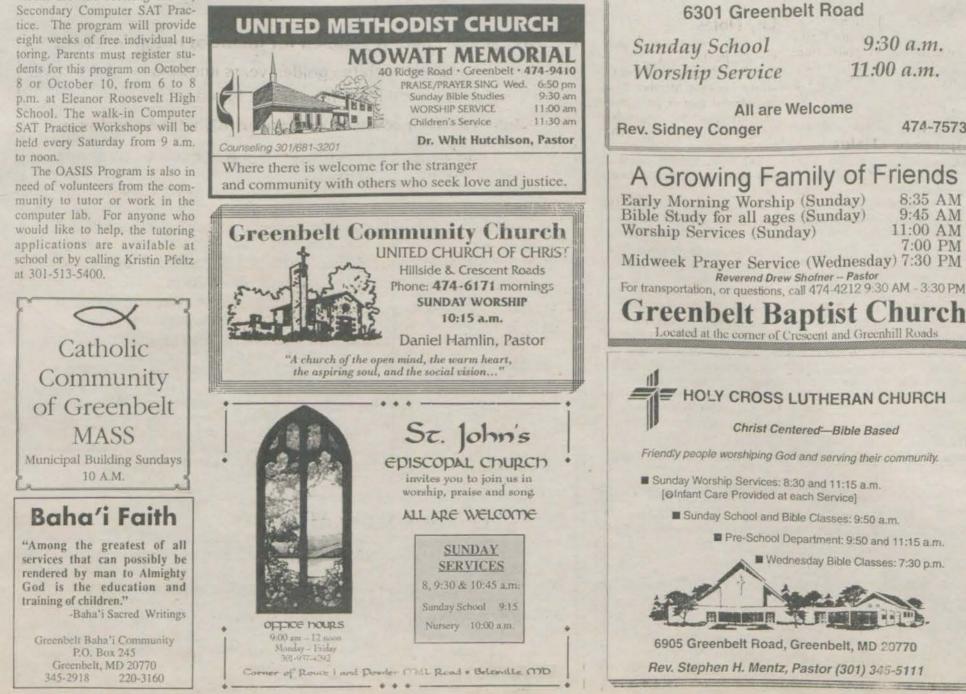

The sale provided an opportunity for gardeners to discuss the various daffodils and tulips that Bill Phelan, the City Horticulturist, had chosen for the sale. Based on his experience he ordered landscape size bulbs. These included large-cupped daffodils, small-cupped daffodils, and several fragrant varieties. For tulips, he chose several Darwin hybrids, a double late tulip known as Angelique (this was an early sell-out), and a tulip named yellow empress, one of the best for perennializing. The crocus known as tommasinianus was another sell-out. The order of bluebells did not arrive, but is expected soon.

At the sale, Bill set up shop at a large picnic table loaded with bulbs and instructions on their care. Local gardeners seized the opportunity to ask questions. Bill told me that he is looking for a way to provide all gardeners of Greenbelt quality bulbs at wholesale prices. "Just think," he said, "what Greenbelt could look like after ten years of sales like this.'

Approximately 60 city managers, assistants and others from throughout the United States, Canada and other countries will tour Greenbelt on Monday morning, October 7. The managers will be attending the annual conference of the International City/ County Management Association in Washington, D.C. The tour is one of several field demonstrations being offered to the conference participants, and is expected to be the best attended.

The purpose of the tour is two-fold. First, it is intended to give the participants an opportunity to see original Greenbelt, which is considered a planning landmark for communities. The federal government built Greenbelt and two other towns in the 1930's as demonstrations of how moderate cost housing could be built in a healthful environment as compared to the tenements found in many cities. Second, the participants will be told and shown how Greenbelt has been able to maintain and im-

Many an owner could tell you about the time a Saturn technician stayed late (even on a Friday night) just to replace a windshield wiper motor. Or the time our 24-Hour Roadside Assistance team helped out when they accidentally locked their keys -- and on occasion, their tropical fish or 18-monthold child - inside their ear. provided the only night lighting for the area. A stairway behind the statue led down the slope to the wooded areas. Sidewalks in the back of the mall connected to the parking lots on either side of the commercial center and to the apartments on Parkway on the one side and to the elementary school on the other.

Bradley-Papp lists a number of advantages to this plan. The mother and child statue is clearly visible and serves as a well presented focal point for the mall area. There were strong axial relationships with the dominant axis running from the Crescent Road underpass to the statue and beyond and the secondary axis running across the mall at the theater and along the northern and southern edges. Low plantings left the store fronts clearly visible. The mall was well linked to the remainder of the central area, both visually and from a pedestrian standpoint. The benches were in keeping with the architecture of the buildings.

As disadvantages, the city's consultant found that the quantity of planted space limited the use of the mall. To re-create this exact design would not allow room for music performances, festivals, and markets. Also, no shady areas were provided for respite from the heat.

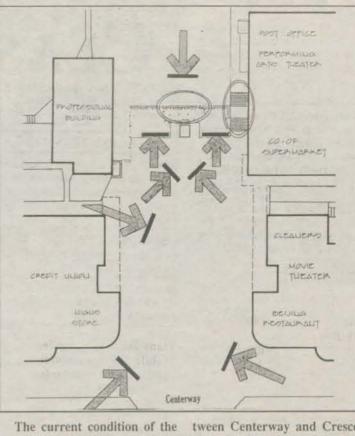

Donovan Plan

In the early seventies, landscape architect Thurman Donovan was hired by the city to renovate the mall. By then, the Co-op and the Greenbelt Medical Center buildings had been built. The statue was now located between two buildings instead of out in the open. To the rear was another parking lot. Donovan felt that the mall should be contained. To do this, he placed a row of evergreen trees across the mall behind the statue.

Residents, who had always used the mall as a social gathering place, had complained that the existing seating arrangements were not conducive to such gatherings, and that the lack of shade prevented gatherings during the daytime in the summer.

To deal with these problems, Donovan proposed two areas of cluster seating in areas shaded by trees. The Bradford pear was then highly regarded as a street and landscape tree for its color in the spring and fall and for its shade in the summer, and was used here, as well as along many streets within the city.

Another request made to the architect was that there be a place

The current condition of the mall blocks out views and vistas, according to Sharon Bradley-Papp. The dense, low branched pear trees obscure the mother and child statue, the theater marquee and other store fronts and directs one's eyes toward an unattractive ground plane. Heavy shrubbery and trees be-visible focal point. It no longer has the presence that it once commanded. There are no strong axial relationships to the buildings or the statue. There are no defined spaces for specific uses within the area.

Bradley-Papp says that the Bradford pear trees are dense, heavy-textured trees that screen and obscure the statue, the theater marquee and other store fronts. If pruned to solve these problems, the appearance of the trees would be ruined. The trees are also at an age when they are short-lived tween Centerway and Crescent also obstruct views of the commercial center. Even the back door view is spoiled by a ragged line of trees at the statue's back and a steep set of stairs that hugs a large blank wall.

and will begin to break apart. One tree has been lost already.

The architect also states that the mall is isolated from the remainder of the city center, both functionally, due to few good pedestrian links, and visually. The more immediate connection to the post office is poor. There are no directional or historical information signs in the center area. Lastly, the benches, tables and planters in the mall do not respond to the architecture of the center or historic precedent.

The Bradford pear trees in the Roosevelt Center mall are now about 25 years old. They are short lived trees, which in their early life are magnificent, but then the plant will literally fall apart, The plants show this problem by losing their distinct pyramidal shape and eventually becoming fan shaped. One tree in the mall has already been lost due to splitting; most of the others are about to follow according to landscape architect Sharon Bradley-Papp. A local arborculture firm has examined the trees and submitted a report to the city recommending that all the trees be replaced with a longer lived species.

—Prepared by Bradley-Papp Landscape Architecture, Inc. for the City of Greenbelt.

for band concerts and for group gatherings. For this purpose, he left a large open space in the center of the mall. To break up the monotony of all the pavement, Donovan proposed using brick pavement in some sections. When this proposal proved too costly, an imitation colored concrete brick, Bomanite, was used instead.

Bradley-Papp finds few advantages to the Donovan plan as the center now exists. The quantity of paved area does provide opportunity for gatherings and community events. The pear trees make the space more inviting, providing spring color in bloom and shade in summer.

In comparison, the architect lists a large number of disadvantages to the mall's current condition. The mother and child statue, in her opinion, is not well presented, nor is it set apart as a
