Beltway Plaza Is a Monument To Its Owner, Sidney Brown

by James Giese

Sidney J. Brown, developer of the Beltway Plaza Shopping Center, who died November 26, once wrote to me as city manager in a fit of pique, ". . .don't make up stories you think you remember, and don't start to presume as a basis for a factual report. I suggest that you stick to the facts, otherwise, I am not going to listen to anything that you have to say nor will anyone else." I wonder what he would say about this story.

In Greenbelt, one cannot think of Sidney Brown without thinking of Beltway Plaza. Judging by what we know of the man and the shopping center, there are similarities in their stories. Both struggled to gain success and did achieve it, but both were somewhat rough around the edges.

Former Mayor Richard Castaldi, who is now director of Intergovernmental Relations for Governor Parris Glendening was one of the many who attended services for Brown at Beth Shalom Congregation. The congregants were told how Brown grew up in Harlem and how he and his brother were frequently forced to fight. Castaldi believes that experience gave Brown his toughness.

The first thing anyone noticed when meeting Brown was his thick, bottle-bottom lensed glasses. At the service, Castaldi said, it was noted how his future wife-to-be read to him his textbooks and lawbooks when he attended school, because his vision was so poor. In spite of this handicap, Brown graduated at the top of his law class and edited the school's law review.

Well known as a philanthropist in the Jewish community, Castaldi said he found Brown to be a very successful but compassionate person who provided aid to many people who were down and out. He also relayed a story told at the eulogy about when Brown first was employed as a lawyer in the U. S. Justice Department. He found on his first day of work that he was provided with a beautiful, spacious office. He felt good that a poor Jewish boy from Harlem had done so well so quickly. When Brown discovered that another new employee, a black man, had not been given an office, Brown, upset by the act of discrimination, arranged for the man to share his office.

Brown's public image was not always good. The Washington press called him a slum landlord with buildings in disrepair and violating city codes. There were also reports of questionable land deals and failure to pay property taxes. Although Brown was frequently in court, to my knowledge he never suffered penalty beyond that which he might consider a necessary cost of doing business.

Castaldi describes Brown as someone who was very bright and had a history of doing things his own way, even when doing it his own way meant that he was involved in controversy.

This was certainly the case with the Beltway Plaza, where he was often involved in litigation and disputed actions.

History

In the early 1960s, construction began on the Capital Beltway. At the same time, Prince George's County became one of the fastest growing counties in the nation - growth dependent to a great extent on garden apartment construction. Commercial developers sought out prime sites for new shopping centers. Greenbelt, with its crossroads of the Beltway, Baltimore-Washington Parkway, Kenilworth Avenue and Greenbelt Road, became a prime location. The city also had the advantage of available large tracts of land because of the way vacant land had been sold off by the U.S. government in the 1950s.

One of three potential sites for a shopping center was the old Washburn Place tract. It had frontage only on Greenbelt Road some distance from the Beltway. However, it was zoned industrial, and at that time retail commercial was a permitted use. Sidney See BELTWAY PLAZA, page 10

The Maryland Board of Public Works on Wednesday, December 13, approved the purchase of 75 acres of land from the Greenbelt Metropark L.L.C. for preservation purposes and to facilitate the development of the remaining lands of Greenbelt Metropark.

The 75 acres borders Cherrywood Lane from the Beltway on the north and follows Indian Creek on the south to Branchville Road.

"We understand the developers are expected to donate another 36 acres." Councilmember Thomas White told the News Review Wednesday night.

Local Artists Featured This New Year's Eve

by Christopher Cherry

It's the end of the millennium, and Greenbelt is being invaded - by art. Professional artists are collaborating with young Greenbelters to create works of art to celebrate Greenbelt New Year 2001. Sculptor Arlette Jassel, the recipient of an ArtsEmerge residency award from the city, is guiding students from Greenbelt Elementary School as they finish three large wooden cut-out figures that will be displayed outdoors on New Year's Eve. On Monday, students from Shelly Lappi's third grade class painted the flat figures, taking care to stay within the lines that Jassel had marked out with dark tape. As the students applied color to various sections, they created an effect much like a jester's parti-colored coat or a stained glass window.

Dramatically lit, the figures will stand near key pedestrian routes during the December 31 celebration, when the central city will be bustling with party goers sampling events at the Community Center, the Youth Center, the Arts Center, the Greenbelt Movie Theater, and the New Deal Café. Party goers themselves will put the finishing touches on the sculptures. Artist Jassel and her helpers are preparing strips of recycled fabric for participants to add to the figures on New Year's Eve.

New art will be unfurled indoors as well. Fiber artist Elizabeth Morisette, a studio artist at the Community Center, has been working with young artists to create a series of 20 banners which will float above the dancing crowd in the Community Center gymnasium. On the stage, giant paper murals will form a colorful backdrop for featured bands D.C. Motors and the See NEW YEAR'S EVE, page 6

Police Studying Options For Safety of Overpass

by Barbara Bonham Young comment from the public.

What Goes On Mon., Dec. 18, 8 p.m. Regular Council Meeting, Municipal Building Thurs., Dec. 21, 7:30 p.m. GHI Board Meeting, Hamilton Place

A letter from Greenbelt Police Chief James Craze was recently delivered to about 200 residents of the Gardenway/Ridge Road and Greenbriar areas as part of police efforts to combat daytime robberies and make the Spellman Overpass area safer. The letter also went to GHI and Greenbriar management personnel. It was prompted by the 13 robberies on November 9 of Eleanor Roosevelt High School students who were walking to school on the somewhat secluded path above Gardenway.

Police have identified and subsequently charged perpetrators with all 13 robberies. The chief's letter both solicits residents' help and informs them of stepped-up police patrol, including an every-morning patrol of the foot path area by a School Resource Officer. It also invites

The letter states: "Even though two suspects have been arrested and warrants for the arrest of a third have been issued, we need your input to help put into place effective, long-term preventive measures to deal with this challenging area Please note any suspicious activity you have observed in the area of the overpass that may assist us in developing and modifying our law enforcement efforts. Also please provide any suggestions... for making the area safer." "Clearing of brush," the letter continues, "increased fencing and/or placement of video monitoring cameras are measures being evaluated as possible remedies."

Carriers Bring Greetings

Around this time of year it has been traditional for the youngsters who deliver the News Review to leave holiday greetings envelopes at the homes they serve. The News Review's financial position is such that we cannot pay our carriers very much. They are therefore dependent on generous holiday donations to supplement their nominal pay,

Most of the carriers range in age from pre-teen to the middle teens. For the younger boys and girls, delivering the News Review is their first job experience. Many of the older carriers started at a young age and continue to deliver the News Review mainly as a service to their neighborhood. It is a learning process for all these youngsters and, in some cases, the instillation of responsibility takes time and patience.

The holiday season affords us all a chance to show appreciation and to provide encouragement for the efforts of these youngsters and at the same time to show understanding for any failings that might have occurred during the year.

Again this year, the carriers will leave envelopes. We hope these envelopes, equipped with our carriers' names and addresses, will be helpful to our readers who wish to show appreciation. In case the carrier's name or address is in doubt, envelopes may be mailed to the News Review, 15 Crescent Road, Suite 100, Greenbelt, MD 20770-1887, for forwarding. Please include your address so we can identify your carrier.

Area Hospitals Will Get Toys from Drive

Prince George's Hospital Center, Laurel Regional and Washington Adventist hospitals are on Joe Wilkinson's list as recipients of toys from the toy drive currently underway by the Lions Club and Beltway Plaza management and merchants. In addition, Laura McNulty, marketing director for Beltway Plaza Mall, will be distributing · to Holy Cross, Children's National Medical Center, and the Washington Hospital Center.

Wonderful Memories

Thank you for bringing back wonderful memories as a result of your November 30th article ("Volunteers Begin the 64th Year Publishing Greenbelt's Newspaper") commemorating the Greenbelt News Review's anniversary.

As a youngster in the 1950s, I regularly pleaded with Vic Fisher for a News Review route. After a short stint as a substitute, I finally was rewarded with a permanent route.

Every Thursday evening, I hiked through the neighborhoods of Greenbelt with 400 copies of the News Review. For this, I received the princely reward of $1 per week, which was enough for the 25 cent admission price to the Greenbelt theater's Saturday matinee, a box of popcorn, and a little left over to deposit at Twin Pines Savings and Loan.

I fondly remember Christmas season when the News Review gave us holiday greeting cards to distribute to our route customers, who, in turn, usually rewarded us with a generous monetary "thank you." Since then, I have often wondered if this tradition lives. If it does, I'm sure Greenbelters are still tipping as well as before.

To steal a phrase, those were the glory days. Thank you to all who have made the Greenbelt News Review a real "community" newspaper in every sense of the word. And thank you for rekindling fond childhood memories.

Fine Thai and American Cuisine Sparkle at Siri's Chef's Secret

by Dorothy Sucher

With more than 20 eateries within the city limits, Greenbelt, once a sleepy little town, has become something of a restaurantlover's mecca - although the absence of a good Thai place has until lately been a notable gap. Now it is being filled by the en-ergetic new owners of Chef's Secret, at 5810 Greenbelt Road. The restaurant, recently renamed "Siri's Chef's Secret," has been a favorite of mine since its opening some 20 years ago, although the place has had its ups and downs under various owners and chefs. Nevertheless, the core menu of quality American and Continental cooking, a variety of seafood and fresh vegetables, and a small but appealing dessert list has been maintained, as has a relaxing atmosphere with twinkling candlelight and snowy tablecloths.

Siri's Chef's Secret has kept all these good things. It has also added a menu of fine Thai food, and the list of items continues to grow. A new menu is expected to make its appearance in time for the holiday season, according to Siri Raungtriphop herself, who has lived in America for 15 years. She is a delicately pretty young woman with sparkling eyes and a vivacious, friendly manner, and her dedication to pleasing the taste buds of her customers with the traditional dishes of her native land is equaled only by her deter-mination to offer food that will be good for their health. Siri is also a nurse in the cardiac Intensive Care unit of a local hospital; and she stresses that if any of her customers are on special diets, the kitchen will be glad to work with them.

Thai cooking tends to be low in cholesterol, salt, and fat, and Siri uses only vegetable oils and never any MSG. The delicate spring rolls are steamed rather than fried, and so are the yummy, open-face stuffed dumplings (Kanom Jeeb), available as an appetizer. Even the Thai soups, such as the Seafood Galanga and the Chicken Lemon Grass soups, can be had in a low-salt version. Vegetarian dishes are available, and more will be on the new menu soon, including vegetarian versions of the featured Thai soups

A Family Affair

Siri will be the first to tell you that the restaurant is a family affair. Her hard-working husband and partner, Sutti, is there seven days a week -- "He is the sweetest man!" she says, and I agree - and among other things he supervises the presentation of the dishes, which are uniformly attractive. At the moment his greatest pride is the brand-new bar he designed, with its gleaming wood, soft colors, and indirect lighting. In the kitchen, Siri's sister Siriporn Rusitanonta presides over the Thai menu. And the chef for the very good American dishes? Siri said, "Henry - uh -" She giggled apologetically. Oh, American names are so difficult! Mala, the restaurant's previous owner, is Sutti's aunt; and one of Siri's aunts has helped out in the kitchen and contributed recipes. Siri grew up in Bangkok, the youngest of seven children. Her mother owned a grocery store, and her father died relatively young. Siri came to America with her mother, and lived with a ideas for decorating the restaurant, study and decided to stay.

She said, "At first it was exciting, but then reality hit. It was very hard, very lonely - a new language, a whole new environment. At home we had a maid, but here we worked very hard." She studied nursing and also worked with her brother, who had gone into hotel banquet services

The Inspector

Perhaps the most important behind-the-scenes figure is Siri's mother, for she is the source of most of the family recipes on which the menu is based. Of brother who had come here to a project that is still ongoing. Siri, who loves Thai wood carvings, has hung a number of them on the pale walls. Their lines are "very soft, curved, gentle," she says. "That's how we are, if you know the people and the culture." There is a Thai dancer, and on one wall a projecting, roof-like overhang that has been shingled with hand-cut wooden shingles Siri brought back from Thailand. "It suggests the roofs of the old towns in the north," she said.

A temple gong hanging on one wall once called monks to their meals, and a couple of winglike, criss-crossed carvings on another shamefully in this article, which emphasizes the new Thai menu; but they are good. I have enjoyed the Rack of Lamb, the Wiener Schnitzel, and the Fresh Seafood en Papilotte (steamed with a lemon herb sauce, in a foil wrapper). The crab cakes, Bouillabaisse Marseillaise, and broiled fish are also recommended.

As for desserts, the bread pudding with rum sauce is divine. And I look forward to trying the Banana Pillows and

These I have neglected the Crepes stuffed with Banana and Strawberry when they appear on the new menu.

> Siri's Chef's Secret will be offering a set menu with champagne on New Year's Eve, featuring a choice of Thai or American food. It seems a good idea to reserve in advance.

course these aren't written recipes, and they can't be found in any book. In fact, Siri takes pride in the fact that, although authentic, they are also unique. "Our Pad Thai (a traditional noodle dish) is really one of the best in the area," she says. "In other restaurants it's too wet and mushy - not really fine. Our secret is to make it fresh and eat it right away. Immediately! Of course people do take it home, but it's not as good." She adds, "I like to see people enjoy the food we make. I like to see them finish the plate!"

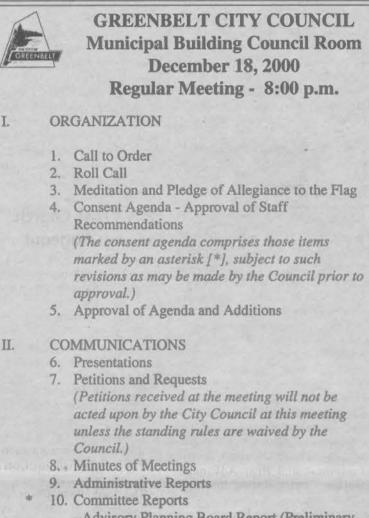

Siri's mother visits the restaurant every couple of weeks, and when she does she insists Siri write down her order on the order pad, as if she's a customer. Siri laughs. "Mom's so cute. She says, 'Don't let them know in the kitchen it's me!' When the food comes, she tests it. She says, 'Oh, it's missing something, you have to improve it. And put in this and this.' Everybody says, 'Oh my god, the Inspector's here!' But my mom is very strict with me. She says 'You must have quality! Otherwise the customers won't come back." After these visits, Siri must go back into the kitchen and work it out with her sister, the chef. Any differences that are not resolved "have to go back to Mom." And each new recipe must be tested three or four times before it receives the maternal seal of approval. Then Siri can add it to the menu.

wall are Thai "Galae," which are mounted on rooftops of homes, to bring good fortune. The walls of the back room, which can accommodate parties of up to 30, are decorated with Thai silks.

Siri plans to revisit Thailand soon and bring back new crafts to add to the restaurant's collection, which includes such objects as the finely-woven baskets carried by opium growers in the mountains. Eventually, some crafts may be offered for sale.

Among the main dishes are the classic Pad Thai, several different curries, chicken and shrimp dishes, and even a New York Steak Panang. Although I haven't tasted them all, I trust they are good. After all, Mom has okayed them. A first-rate Crispy Duckling comes with a delicate pineapple sauce over vegetables that have not been overcooked. Soon to appear on the menu is a mouth-watering fish dish, incorporating sweet, sour, and spicy flavors in the subtle sauce.

A dish I've never encountered before is Mee Klob, an ethereal concoction of extremely fine, crisp noodles with a sweetish coating and a sprinkling of tiny shrimp. This can be served as either an appetizer or a dessert, and it is addictive. It will appear on the new menu.

NEW YEAR'S EVE

Trinidad and Tobago Steel Band, courtesy of enthusiastic students and Community Center artist Mike McMullin. Kids counting down to the new year at the Recreation Department's Countdown Camp from December 27 to December 29 will also create decorations for the party.

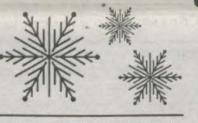

Earlier this month, parents attending the successful Festival of Lights Craft Show found they had plenty of time to shop, because their kids were having so much fun helping Morisette festoon several banners with glitter, beads, and ribbon. Elementary school students completed more banners this week. Morisette has varied the style of the banners, applying free-form stitching with metallic thread to some, cutting a random array of holes in others. The verdict of the young artists participating in the New Year's arts projects, "Awesome!"

Showcasing the talents of Greenbelt's citizens is one of the themes of the celebration, according to Greenbelt New Year committee member Patti Brothers. "In addition to the amazing visual art being created for the event, we are very proud to present several performers who live or work in Greenbelt," she said. Brothers noted that the Greenbelt Arts Center's production of "Millennium Jukebox" features a talented cast of 25 Greenbelters ranging in age from 4 to 74. Other resident performers include juggler Dave Schuman, who will perform at the Youth Center, and Guys In Ties, who will play at the New Deal Café. Neighboring Goddard Space Flight Center will be represented at the event by the spellbinding Goddard Storytellers and by Gerald Tiki, an authentic fire dancer. "There will be art and performances by Greenbelters both indoors and out this New Year's Eve," said Brothers, "and everyone in Greenbelt is invited 2208.

Christmas Concert Delights Audience by Nelda Young

The gym in the Community Center was alive with music on December 10. The Greenbelt Concert Band and the Greenbelt Combined Choir played and sang their hearts out for an hour and a half.

Thomas Cherrix, who has conducted the band since 1963, started the evening performance with a crowd pleaser, Rudolph the Rednosed Reindeer. To emphasize the festive nature of the occasion, all 51 band members wore red and green holiday ties with their formal black and whites.

As a divertissement, the 40year-old band combined with the 30-year-old choir for three songs for Christmas; Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring; and concluded with Frosty, the Snowman.

Then Jean Cook, the director of the choral group, took center stage wearing a vest with a holiday scene on the back. The choral group was dressed for the occasion in seasonal red, green, with some blues. They sang old familiar Christmas music and ended the evening with O, Holy Night.

The audience was enthusiastic in expressing its enjoyment of the Holiday Lights 2000 performance.

GAVA to Handle Ceramics Program this Spring

by Nelda Young

On December 1 the city signed a facility agreement with the Greenbelt Association for the Visual Arts (GAVA) allowing them to continue the ceramic program in the Community Center through June 30, 2001, according to Community Center Supervisor Joe McNeal. This supersedes their April cooperative and facility use agreement which would have extended through August 31, 2001.

GAVA, which is headed by Barbara Simon, includes several programs. It offers classes for a variety of ages whose talents range from beginner to highly skilled. Currently two Eleanor Roosevelt High School interns spend four afternoons a week working with Greenbelt Access Television 9 (GATE) staff learning animation. Five other interns specialize in painting and ceramics. The Labor Day Art Show is sponsored by GAVA. The Potters' Guild, whose members sell their work at the Community Center, are members of GAVA.

Greenbelt Pottery (GP), led by Jessica Gitlis, started as a sole proprietorship in 1996. Its members came together with other artists to form GAVA. But, according to informed sources, GP's members were potters with no particular interest in GAVA's programs, administration, and other activities. When they decided to separate from the more general group, GP decided to incorporate. Potters accumulate pots.

NOTICE TO GHI MEMBERS GUTTER CLEANING SCHEDULE

The GHI gutter cleanings scheduled during the week of December 11 through 15 are as follows:

- Frame, Single-family, Townhomes
 - 9 through 22 courts Hillside Road
 - I through 5 courts Laurel Hill Road
 I through 10 courts Research Road
 - 65 through 73 courts Ridge Road
 - 133 Greenhill Road
 - 135 A & B Northway Road
 - · 3 through 8 Woodland Way
- Masonry Homes
 - 56 through 62 Crescent Road
 - 1 through 4 courts Eastway Road
 - 2 through 8 courts Hillside Road
 - 1 & 2 courts Northway Road
 - 1 and 2 Woodland Way

Schedules for the remainder of the program will be published weekly in the News Review. The contract supervisor for the programs is Irvin Utz. He can be reached on (301) 474-4161 ext. 121

When their cupboards and their friends and families have no place to put more pots, they put their pots up for sale. So GP set up a Sunday afternoon shop on the second floor of the Community Center. Students and artists have permanent display cases there. A number of artists show pots that vary in style and in glazes used. This shop has served as a source of money for the potters and the studio and freed the members from perpetually reinventing fund raisers. Volunteers keep an inventory of pottery, artists, and money.

Negotiations will begin in April for the city's ceramic program for the fiscal year 2002.

POLICE

police department, drop it off in person or give the letter with their comments to any Greenbelt officer.

On December 5, City Manager Michael McLaughlin walked the area of the overpass with Patrol Commander Lt. Thomas Kemp. (Chief Craze had surveyed the area the preceding week.) Kemp told the News Review that the area has been designated a "special check area," meaning one which has experienced an increase in criminal activity. Such an area needs extra attention not only from the School Resource Officer but from other police officers in addition, when assignments permit.

Kemp noted that undergrowth may be cleared from the area. He added that the police were also looking at additional fencing as a deterrent. "In general, the more you decrease avenues of escape for criminals, the less likely they are going to act," he said, "because they'll feel trapped. They often want to be able to run into the woods."

As to possible installation of surveillance cameras, Public Information and Communications Coordinator Beverly Palau told the News Review that it would be very expensive at this time to lay fiber between the overpass and the police department, but that the cable company as part of an institutional network will be providing fiber connection between all city buildings by the end of 2001, and this could absorb some of the cost. Fiber connection to all county office buildings will be provided at the same time.

Greenbelt Detective John Barrett, an 11-year veteran of the department, told the News Review that active investigation continues of two reported similar robberies starting in mid-September. "We're still trying to link those and the 13 robberies," he said

Brown and his corporation, First National Realty, had acquired this tract. Brown announced his intention to build a regional shopping center there with the region's first climate-controlled enclosed mall.

Among the competition, Brown won out because he already had the zoning. In 1962, the commercial use of the property was established by the opening of a small strip center anchored by a grocery and drug store. That same year, construction began on the S. Klein on the Square discount department store at the east end of the tract.

The typical regional mall is built after developers secure commitments from major tenants to locate there. This enables the owners to get financing. An integrated plan is then finalized and the entire center is built at one time. With the big anchor tenants, there is no problem leasing the small store space to other retail firms.

Piecemeal

This didn't happen at Beltway Plaza. Instead the center was built piecemeal. The city council and others were greatly irritated by this lack of planning. Brown repeatedly belittled costly plans as being worthless, because he would have to do whatever a prospective tenant wanted if and when he found one. Brown eventually hoped to have more department stores located at the center.

The Beltway Plaza property was a hillside. It sloped from the crest upon which Greenbelt Middle School and the school bus parking and maintenance facility are located down to the bottomland to the west for Indian Creek. (Siri's Chef's Secret marks the west end of the shopping center.) The land also sloped down from the tract behind it upon which the Springhill Lake Apartments were being built in 1962 to Greenbelt Road. Whether it was the wish of the Klein people or Brown's architects I don't know, but it was decided that people on Greenbelt Road should look down at the new department store, which was to be located at the highest part of the property. Thus it was necessary to do extensive earth moving.

Tragedy

Unfortunately, construction of the store building did not wait for the earth to be moved. Instead, a huge hole was dug into the hillside in which the store's footings and basement walls were built. In late December, 1962, tragedy struck the site when a building wall collapsed. Five workmen were killed, causing state and county regulators to strengthen their construction codes. (The city did not regulate building construction at that time.)

Removing the hillside created other major problems for Brown. The most serious problem as far as the city and Prince George's Board of Education were concerned was the steep embankment left between the Klein store and the school bus parking facility. The embankment was so steep that stabilization was not possible, and large sections of the hillside would slide down into the parking lot. Unfortunately, the laws of that time gave governments little authority to deal with the problem, and new laws enacted later grandfathered in existing situations.

Major Tenant

Brown faced another problem in developing his enclosed mall.

Beltway Plaza developer Sidney Brown (man in light-colored coat on right) cuts the ribbon

He could not find another major tenant willing to be in the same center as S. Klein. Brown him-self drove the point home one time by showing off his shirt after being criticized by the city council for not having a tenant. "See that," he reportedly said, "I paid only five dollars for this at Klein's. That's why I can't get another major tenant to come in.'

With Springhill Lake Apartments nearing completion with just under 3,000 apartments and its residents becoming active in community affairs, the city was at the grand opening of the Plaza on February 3, 1962.

-Greenbelt History of a New Town, 1987

facing a problem of its own. There was only a single access road to the apartments, Edmonston Road. The only place for another access road was through Beltway Plaza, but Brown fought putting any road See BELTWAY PLAZA, page 11

The only way for the county government to get Brown to do something was to require road dedication at the time of subdivision. When Brown proposed the construction of a gasoline station and car wash on his property, he was required to dedicate a short entrance road, Gentry Drive. After this street was built, Brown reached agreement with the Springhill Lake owners to grant a temporary easement for a road back to Springhill Lake with Springhill Lake paying for the road's construction. The thin pavement installed quickly turned into potholes and the apartment residents got mad.

By 1969, Springhill Lake residents were organized and demanding a better road. Getting nowhere with Brown or their landlords, they sought relief from the city. Council refused to fix the road because it was a private road. A coalition put together by formef mayor and then Councilmember Francis White caused a major turnover in the 1969 election, with White becoming the new mayor and two new members being elected to the council, one of whom, Joel Katz, was a resident of Springhill Lake.

By this time, Brown was getting ready to build his enclosed mall, having finally achieved the necessary financing, even though he lacked a second anchor store. It became clear to him that he would have to dedicate the remainder of Gentry Drive in order to get permission to build his mall. In December 1969 a three-way agreement was reached in which Brown agreed to dedicate the right-of-way for the road (now Cherrywood Lane) and the city and Springhill Lake agreed to share the cost of construction.

Enclosed Mall

On November 22 1971 "Grand Opening" ceremonies were held for a 63-store enclosed mall that ran from the Klein store to the original strip center, but the mall did not open. The county had refused to give occupancy permits because the problems with the steep embankment next to the Klein store still had not been corrected. The ribbon was cut by Brown's wife after Governor Marvin Mandel failed to show. Meanwhile, environmentalists bankment. It was not until a court order was obtained that major work was done, and that still did not fully resolve the problem.

Klein Closes

In 1975, S. Klein announced that it would close its store in Greenbelt. This was a devastating blow to Brown, Beltway Plaza and the merchants who had only recently opened business there.

Brown worked desperately to find a major tenant. He vigorously wooed Bloomingdale's Department Store. The firm's chairman of the board, Lawrence Lachman, looked at the Beltway Plaza in June 1975. Brown rounded up prominent local officials led by Congresswoman Gladys Noon Spellman to greet the official. In a followup letter Brown wrote, "Forget what the center looks like. , .Forget what's there now - there's no store in there that I can't get out and there isn't any store 'out there' that I can't get in."

While he failed to get a major tenant, a six-theater movie complex did open that year, and helped to keep the center viable. Even so, Brown wrote in 1983, ". . .after S. Klein closed, Beltway Plaza was engaged in a life and death struggle to survive. It lost many of its tenants and couldn't encourage others to come in because it had no 'anchor' tenant and a shopping center the size of Beltway Plaza needs to have an anchor tenant." Brown took over the operation of some of the stores in order to assure that the center kept an appearance of being a vital shopping center.

The Klein store remained empty until 1979 when the first floor became occupied with stores. Later Burlington Coat Factory took over the basement.

New Additions

It wasn't until 1984 that major new additions came to the center. That year Bennigans, Popeye's, Wendy's, and Chi-Chi's Mexican restaurants were added and the Academy Theaters added a second eight-theater complex. Other businesses proposed from time to time, never made it, often because of city opposition. They included a skateboard park, a night club and a billiard parlor.

In 1992 and 1993 the mall underwent its last major construction program. Two parking decks were added and a new store was built in back for the Sports Authority. Caldor Department Store, in the space now occupied by Value City, took over the upper floor of the Klein building. At the other end of the center, part of the original strip center was torn down and a new Giant Food store was constructed. The mall was extended to this new store. This fall, construction was completed on remodeling and enlarging the first floor of the Klein building to accommodate Target Department Store.

Even though Beltway Plaza has failed to be Sidney Brown's dream of a shopping mall with four anchor tenants, and even though it has grown in a helter-skelter fashion, the mall has succeeded in becoming one of the most viable commercial centers in the county, particularly inside the Beltway. Just as the Jewish boy from Harlem fought his way to success amidst much controversy, his monument, Beltway Plaza, under his guidance, fought its way to success, as well.

Elementary School Artwork Exhibited

During the month of December, artwork created by children from Greenbelt Elementary School will be on exhibit on the ground floor of Greenbelt Library in the display case. The clay pottery and sculptures were made by Tom Lenhart's 3rd grade class in ceramic classes taught by Barbara Simon, the director of the Greenbelt Association for the Visual Arts (GAVA). Lenhart's class is studying American Indians and were inspired by learning about ceramic works created by tribes in the Southwest.

The trading card designs on display are by 5th grade students in cartoon classes taught by George Kochell, who teaches comic book, cartoon and animation classes for GAVA. Kochell's classes at Greenbelt Elementary School were done in collaboration with the 5th grade language arts curriculum. The students create themes and characters and develop them in comic strips, trading cards, TV/movie storyboards and other formats.

The ceramic and cartoon programs are supported by Greenbelt Service Center (Mobil) which has a Wednesday "Fuel for Schools" program to finance fine arts programs at Greenbelt Elementary School and St. Hugh's School.

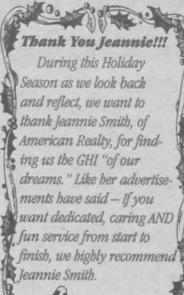

Online Forum Set On Physical Therapy

United Cerebral Palsy of Prince George's and Montgomery counties is sponsoring an online forum conducted by Sue Cobb, PT, on working with physical therapists in schools. The forum is set for December 20 from 7 to 9 p.m. at www.netathon.org. Past forums can also be read on the website.

Sue Cobb has worked for the Prince George's County Public Schools for 18 years as a physical therapist. For the last eight years she has directed the physical therapy program. The forum focus will be how to successfully work with the physical therapist to maximize benefits for a child.

Call United Cerebral Palsy at 301-262-4993 for additional information about the forum.

Combined Choir Performed Dec. 3 by Mary Moien

The Greenbelt Combined Choir performed in the Greenbelt Community Church on December 3 for what might be their final annual Christmas concert under the direction of Jean Cook. "It is my last year. I have retired," Cook informed the News Review. She indicated after more than a quarter century, it is "time to pass on the baton to somebody else."

The choir performs each year in the candle-filled but intimate Community Church. The women and men of the choir come from several Greenbelt churches as well as people not affiliated with another choir but who just like to sing. Their enjoyment of singing is evident. This year's performance mirrored earlier ones in that it was a combination of familiar as well as lesser known carols and hymns. The audience joined in on several wellknown hymns.

Doug Love, known for many interests in Greenbelt, entertained the audience with a Shaker melody "Hail, Hail the Beautiful Love also played the Morn." American zither during this solo. Sara Gilliom and Danielle Charles accompanied the choir with handbell ringing to "I Saw Three Ships."

VIRGIN (Never known to fail). Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, Fruitful Divine Splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate, Virgin, assist me in my necessity. Oh Star of the Sea, help me and show me here you are my Mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech You from the bottom of my heart to succor me in my necessity (Make Request). There are none that can withstand your power. Oh Mary, conceived without sin pray with us who have recourse to thee (Three times), Say this prayer for three con-secutive days. Publish it and it will be granted to you. Grateful thanks. –AH

GREENBELT NEWS REVIEW

Public Can Comment on School Projections

The Prince George's County Planning Board of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission (M-NCPPC) held a public hearing to solicit public comment on "Draft Regulations to Analyze the Development Impact on Public School Facilities, January 2001" and school enrollment projections developed by M-NCPPC planners. The hearing was held during the Planning Board's meeting on December 14. While public testimony was heard at the December 14 meeting. Written comments will be accepted until close of business, December 19. Review of public testimony, final analysis and recommendations will occur on December 21.

The purpose of the hearing was to provide the public with an understanding of the methodology used to arrive at school enrollment projections; to review the five-year projections to be used in the schools-Adequate Public Facilities (APF) test beginning January 1, 2001 for each school; and to obtain public input before the projections are finalized.
