City Elections Board Explores Alternative Voting Systems

by James Giese

Greenbelt resident Stephen Jascourt and Eric Olson, deputy director of the Center for Voting and Democracy, made a presentation to the Greenbelt Board of Elections on September 30 on two alternative methods for counting votes in city elections – choice voting and cumulative voting. They claim that if Greenbelt used these methods it would enable minorities to achieve proportional representation on the Greenbelt City Council.

The Elections Board had arranged for the special meeting following direction by council on a request by Councilmember Alan Turnbull at a March 11 council meeting. Board chair Judith Ott said that the board would provide advice to council but would make no decision to change election procedures.

Jascourt, who had offered the city council his assistance on the two alternatives, used electronic slides to make his presentation. Besides the board, this reporter and city staff, 12 others were present including all five councilmembers and at least two former council candidates.

Pizza

Using a pizza as an example, Jascourt demonstrated the difference between proportional representation and current election methods. Dividing the pizza into five slices standing for five elected representatives, he suggested a sample vote in which 11 of 20 voters favored pepperoni, five favored green peppers and four favored mushrooms. Under the current system for electing council candidates, pepperoni would have received 55 percent of the votes cast and there would be a pepperoni pizza. Under a proportional representation system, a majority of the slices, three, would be pepperoni, but one slice would be green peppers and the last, mushrooms. He argued that a pepperoni council would be inclined to make everyone eat pepperoni, while a proportional representative council might help to forge a compromise, such as using soy pepperoni, making policy kosher and the pizza vegetarian.

Jascourt displayed city election data for the past 10 elections showing the number of votes not cast that voters could have cast. With each voter allowed five votes to cast, Jascourt calculated that an average of only four votes was actually cast per voter over the 20-year period of time (although the average for the most recent election was closer to four and one-half votes per voter). He felt this lower number indicated an effort on the part of some voters to “bullet vote,” that is, withhold votes from candidates less favored to the advantage of the one or more candidates most favored. He said that the total of votes not cast at almost every election exceeded the number cast for the candidate who became mayor.

Diversity

According to census figures Jascourt displayed Greenbelt’s population is becoming more diverse, with the combined percentage of all minority groups now greater than the number of whites in the city. With so many minorities, holding at-large elections can pose legal problems, he contended. Jascourt said that in

Greenbelt Lake, New Stores And Grant Occupy City Council

by Barbara Hopkins

A water quality assessment of Greenbelt Lake, a new shopping center and an application for funds toward the Springhill Lake Recreation Center were on the agenda at the regular meeting of the Greenbelt City Council on Monday, October 7. Council also agreed on comments to the county school board’s CEO search committee (see separate story on page 9) and heard an update on the city’s information technology.

Lake Study

Council agreed to contract with Environmental Systems Analysis, Inc. (ESA) for a study of water quality in the watershed of Greenbelt Lake. ESA will provide a report to the city containing a comprehensive plan enabling the City of Greenbelt to apply for money from grant programs. ESA has worked with the city before on environmental projects and is familiar with the lake and its tributaries. Terri Hruby from Greenbelt’s Department of Planning and Community Development told council that the department plans to use the study as an educational experience for staff, who may be able to perform future studies after observing ESA personnel.

The proposed study will use a process called Rapid Stream

Assessment Technique to evaluate the relative health of all perennial streams in the lake watershed. The final report will include maps, photos and a prioritized list of potential water resource improvements that could raise the water quality and health of Greenbelt Lake. There will also be a wildlife assessment. ESA will assist the city’s Public Works Department in planning and implementing projects to carry out their recommendations.

ESA has been working with city staff to develop a plan addressing city concerns and expectations. Councilmember Thomas White said he thinks the proposal accomplishes this goal. Money for the project will come from capital improvement funds from the FY 2003 budget.

Councilmember Alan Turnbull requested that the contract specify a briefing of council and an opportunity for public input on the report after its completion.

Computer Update

Stephen Robinson, the city’s first director of information technology, reported to council on changes to the city’s computer and communications systems. He said the city’s computer network has been updated to utilize a fiber optics network installed by Comcast. The first round of system upgrades to the internet access included installation of a firewall and email interface enabling councilmembers to access their email accounts either from home or the city offices. Fifty percent of the city’s computers have been replaced with new equipment, he said, and 25 percent of the rest were replaced with existing hardware after they were upgraded.

Robinson informed council that the city will save at least $40,000 a year by making an investment in equipment for phone service upgrades and aggregating current lines for more efficient use. The equipment will require no budgetary expenditure, he said, since it could be paid for out of the savings obtained.

Further upgrades, necessary because of the age of the systems and difficulties in obtaining parts, will be made to city phone systems during the rest of this year.

Robinson said he also plans to expand the city’s use of automation in the near future. He is looking into software that would enable public works to automate part of its maintenance program. He said current Recreation Department software has the capability to allow citizens to register

Jaeger Tract Acquisition Possible at $1.5 Million

by Elaine Skolnik

City Manager Michael McLaughlin will update the Greenbelt City Council on possible sale of the Jaeger tract at council’s regular meeting next Monday, October 21 in the Municipal Building at 8 p.m. “We believe we are close to finalizing a deal on [the sale of] the property,” he said. “The land owners [Community Management Company] appear willing to sell the Jaeger tract for $1.5 million.” They also want to “take advantage of a possible tax credit and tax write-off that might be available,” he added.

The decades-long desire of the city, joined later by the National Park Service (NPS) and the Westchester Park Civic Association, to incorporate the 17.43 acre Jaeger tract into Greenbelt Park appears to be nearing final resolution. Surrounded on three sides by the federal park, which is itself located within the corporate limits of the City of Greenbelt, the Jaeger tract is south of Westchester Park drive about 300 feet east of Kenilworth Avenue in the unincorporated Westchester Park community.

Over the past two years a partnership composed of the City of Greenbelt, NPS, National Park Trust and Westchester Park Civic Association have pressed for integration of the Jaeger tract, zoned rural residential (two detached single family homes an acre), into adjacent Greenbelt Park. Although the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission has approved, with conditions, a preliminary plan of subdivision for 19 single-family homes on the property, the owners, Community Management Company, and their representative Amir Ahmad have been willing to negotiate with NPS on the sale of the land.

This process has moved slowly, starting with the obtaining of appraisals of the Jaeger tract by NPS and Community and followed by negotiations by both parties of the difference between their appraisals. The NPS ap-

Half Million Is Slated For Left-Turn Lanes

by Virginia Beauchamp

The Maryland Department of Transportation has allocated $557,000 for the widening of Greenbelt Road to provide double left-turn lanes for eastbound traffic at the intersection with Cherrywood Lane. Work is scheduled to begin this fall, with completion in spring 2003. The project is listed among new road construction plans for Prince George’s County scheduled through 2008.

According to Celia Craze, the city’s director of planning and community development, her office has not yet been informed about design plans for the change – whether Greenbelt Road will actually be widened or the median strip possibly narrowed. A left-turn lane normally requires a narrower width than a lane designed for through-traffic, she said. Opposite Cherrywood Lane in Berwyn Heights on the other side of Greenbelt Road is 60th Street.

The prospect of road construction at the Greenbelt intersection may be complicated by new commercial construction to begin in the northwest segment of adjacent property at the intersection, which belongs to Beltway Plaza. Currently the area surrounding the former gas station at that site and the car wash facility has been fenced off for demolition work that is underway.

A new row of stores at a right angle to Cherrywood Lane is projected for the site. City council at its October 7 meeting expressed concern about the impact on Cherrywood traffic by the planned access lane to this new commercial property, which will parallel Greenbelt Road. An immediate left-turn lane from Cherrywood Lane following a left turn from Greenbelt Road could create intolerable congestion, the city believes.

for recreation classes online. Mayor Judith Davis asked if this would not give an unfair advantage to internet users in registering for classes, which are first-come, first-serve. Robinson explained that it is within the functionality of the software to limit the number of registrations allowed online, as well as defining dates for internet registration.

Shopping Center

Quantum Management Co. has obtained a county building permit for demolishing the car wash on Cherrywood Lane and constructing in its place a one-story retail shopping structure to contain from two to six tenants.

A revised site plan was presented to council including changes satisfactory to city staff and the Advisory Planning Board in landscaping, pedestrian circulation, access, parking and other issues. Kap Kapastin, of Quantum, told council that he had reason to hope there might be one or two restaurants, including a bakery café, at the new center. Hrubby said she expected there would actually be fewer than six businesses in the building.

Councilmembers expressed concern that patrons be prevented from making illegal and unsafe left turns into and out of the center, since exits for north-bound traffic onto Cherrywood Lane would require driving around the shopping area to the exit. Another concern was for pedestrian safety in that shoppers returning to their cars might be endangered by cars entering the shopping center at a high rate of speed and from an angle difficult for the pedestrian to see.

Turnbull requested that voting on the issue be deferred to the next meeting when Quantum representatives would return to show how these concerns would be addressed.

However, City Manager Michael McLaughlin then clarified that this design was not actually a site plan. Because of the size and scope of the project, staff had wanted to make council aware of it. Since the county had issued a building permit, the city permit was a matter of course as long as the project conformed to the building code. It was the opinion of City Attorney Robert Manzi that the city had little leeway to deny the permit since a county permit had been issued. Nonetheless, Kapastin said his group would take council's suggestions and concerns under consideration and would send a report back through city staff.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts, who during the discussion had called it "a bad design . . . a dangerous design," one he could not vote for in good conscience due to concerns about pedestrian safety, then said he had no choice but to vote in favor of the plan. White moved that council approve the plan with the inclusion of recommendations from city planning staff, since these were items the applicant had already agreed upon. The motion carried, four to one, with Turnbull dissenting.

Block Grant

Council voted to accept staff's recommendation to apply to the county for a grant of $300,000 to be used toward the Springhill Lake Recreation Center project. In previous years, this type of county grant had been used for street work.

At a meeting on September 18, officials from the Prince George's Housing and Community Development Department outlined the new direction the county is taking in awarding the grants. Representatives of municipalities attending the meeting were encouraged to focus on "economic development/revitalization" projects and discouraged from submitting street work. County representatives also said that awards of $100,000 per year should not be expected to continue.

In preparing the recommendation to council, staff noted the Springhill Lake Recreation project is in line with what the county is now looking for in awarding grants. If approved, the project will be within $150,000 of the estimated $1.5 million cost.

Davis asked David Moran, assistant to the city manager, to include on the application information on how the project would improve the safety of children in the area, add to its economic viability by making the apartment complex a more desirable place to live and offer an educational component since computers would be available at the center. A motion to submit the application was approved unanimously.

P.G. Philharmonic Opens Season

Music Director Charles Ellis opens the concert with Suppe's Poet and Peasant Overture and is joined by Langston Fitzgerald III in the rarely-performed Neruda Trumpet Concerto. The performance begins at 8 p.m. in the Hallam Theatre, Queen Anne Fine Arts Building at the Prince George's Community College in Largo. For information, call 301-454-1462.

praisal is about $580,000 below that by Community. Reportedly, the NPS appraisal value was $1.1 million and Community's appraisal was $1.68 million.

Federal Support

Meanwhile Congressman Steny Hoyer was successful in persuading the US Congress to include in its 2002 Fiscal Year Department of Interior appropriations bill $1 million for acquisition of the Jaeger tract, subject to matching funds. Obtaining matching funds totaling $1 million was a big hurdle for the partnership to overcome before Congress passes its Fiscal Year 2003 budget, probably sometime after the November elections. The concern was that not enough matching funds would be collected by the partnership to prevent Congress from reprogramming the Jaeger tract appropriation to other purposes. To prevent this from occurring, Hoyer recently obtained a waiver on the federal matching funds requirement.

Currently, the amount that must be raised is $500,000 to meet the $1.5 million sales price that Community Management Company appears to be willing to accept. Funds already available include $1 million from Fiscal Year 2002 Department of Interior budget, $100,000 committed by the City of Greenbelt, $100,000 from NPS, $200,000 guaranteed by the National Park Trust (a "Private Land Conservancy Saving American Parklands") and $9,000 from the Westchester Park community. A source for the balance of about $100,000 has not yet been found.

While the Trust has guaranteed $200,000, it does not currently have the funds. However, the Trust will guarantee reimbursement of such funds in about five years if someone comes up now with the necessary $200,000. During this period, if the partnership has not been able to collect the required funds, the Trust promises to reimburse the donor by check. There has been consideration as to whether the city should provide the $200,000 "gap/bridge" financing but no decision has been made by council. Apparently the Jaeger tract owners will accept payment for the land in installments over a period of years.

McLaughlin noted that more details must be worked out but believed that the partnership is close to closing this deal. Representatives of Hoyer, the Trust, NPS and Westchester Park are expected to attend next Monday's city council meeting.

New Food Nutrient Database Available Electronically

The Agricultural Research Service (ARS) has launched an updated version of its flagship database that reports nutrients in 6,220 food items. Named the "Nutrient Database for Standard Reference, Release 15," or SR15 for short, it is the major authoritative source of food composition in the United States. Both generic and brand-name food items are included.

Information is derived from US Department of Agriculture research, qualified food industry sources, USDA-sponsored contracts and rigorously evaluated scientific literature. A single food item's complete profile boasts 117 nutrient categories, which appear in columnar format. Newly developed computer programs are used to evaluate data for scientific accuracy and quality control programs maximize data reliability.

Meat product categories in particular have been beefed up. Ground beef data were revamped to reflect new market trends and the demand for lower fat products. Nutritive profiles were added for a variety of emu, ostrich, deer, bison and elk products as well as for eight new beef cuts. Many brand-name, ready-to-eat breakfast cereals and candies were updated to reflect current names and nutrient values.

The ARS Nutrient Data Laboratory in Beltsville provides electronic access to SR15 for free from its website and for purchase on CD-ROM. Go to <http://www.nal.usda.gov/fnic/foodcomp/Data/SR15> to access the website.

Safeway Promotes Educational Card

The popular Club Card for Education program established by Safeway's Eastern Division is being introduced for the 2002-03 school year with enhancements that will allow participation by schools, churches and other youth education organizations, replace free equipment with monthly cash contributions and has the potential for recipients to earn more money monthly overall (with customer contributions totaling up to three percent). The name of the new program has been changed to Club Card for Education powered by eScrip (Electronic Scrip).

Customers will continue to make contributions to the group(s) of their choice simply by swiping their Safeway Club Card each time they shop. Shoppers must register their card and designate the organization(s) of their choice before donations are credited. Sign up online at escrip.com; through any participating school, church or educational group; or at any Safeway location. A maximum of three institutions may be selected per household.

Charities will likely earn more money as the collection period for the enhanced campaign has also been expanded from six to eight months (from October 1, 2002 through May 31, 2003).

For more information, visit www.escrip.com.

ACE Lists Desired Traits Of School System CEO

by Barbara Hopkins

The Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) submitted to the Greenbelt City Council a report which had earlier been sent to the Prince George's County School System CEO search committee. In order to meet the comment period deadline of October 1, the city administration authorized ACE to submit the report and note that a statement of council's position would follow. Council discussed the report at its meeting on October 7.

ACE outlined qualities that a school system CEO should possess. These include: firm knowledge of educational philosophy and process; ability to inspire school system employees and attract and retain a qualified administrative staff and principals; ability to function well as a team player, including a demonstrated ability to work with the school board, county and state elected officials; the wisdom to evaluate, accept and appropriately use the ideas of a competent staff and not be threatened by alternative views; a respect for citizens and county officials shown through attendance at community events and by seeking community input before making significant changes; and attendance at county schools by any school-age children of the CEO.

Leta Mach, ACE chair, told council the school board's requirements were not that comprehensive. Mayor Judith Davis suggested additional criteria, including the ability to attract and retain competent teachers and other school employees and the fiscal knowledge to leverage state and federal funds. Councilmember Thomas White later added private funds to this list.

In its report ACE expressed the opinion that the incumbent CEO, Dr. Iris Metts, does not meet all the criteria outlined by ACE. After discussion about the appropriateness of this statement, council voted to send a letter to the county school board's search committee without comment on the incumbent but concurring

ACE Reading Club Receives Grant

A grant application entitled "ACE Reading Club" in the amount of $5,000 has received approval under the Maryland Drug and Alcohol Grants Program Fund.

The grant requires that "The Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) will conduct a reading program for Greenbelt students during the school year. Students will be encouraged to read books on a weekly basis and write book reviews. Participants will receive certificates of accomplishment and be recognized by their school community and municipality."

with the criteria given by ACE and adding the criteria suggested during the council meeting. The letter will also include the final sentence of the ACE report: "The county deserves and should be able to attract the very best leadership available and a search should be made to ensure that the county does receive such leadership."

Mach said there should be opportunity in March for further input on the candidates for the CEO position.

the South, at-large elections have been used to dilute minority votes and many jurisdictions have been challenged under the Voting Rights Act.

Jascourt said that the courts have often ordered the creation of single-member districts or the use of cumulative voting. In 1994, according to Jascourt, a Federal judge ordered cumulative voting for the Worcester County, Maryland Commissioners. A black had never been elected to office there, he said. However, an appeals court remanded the case back to the lower court to consider possible alternatives, such as council districts.

Jascourt declared, "We don't want districts." He noted that district boundaries are arbitrarily set by elected officials protecting their own turf and that gerrymandering (he called it "gerry-meandering") occurs. He also said that the city council did not want arbitrary lines dividing Greenbelt. He contended that using districts results in elections where winner takes all, and minority interests don't bother to vote because there is no chance of success. Districts only benefit minorities that are grouped in one location, not spread out through the jurisdiction, he said.

Cumulative Voting

Of the two alternatives Jascourt discussed, cumulative voting is the simpler to explain. In the case of a city council election, voters would be allowed five votes to cast in whatever fashion they please. Thus, a voter could cast one vote for each of five candidates, all five votes for one candidate, or spread the votes among two, three or four candidates. By concentrating all five votes on one candidate, minority voters can insure that one of their group can get elected but then they have no say in the selection of the other four councilmembers. If there are too many minority candidates, they may cause the minority vote to be split and fail to elect any one of their group.

Choice Voting

While it's simple to explain how votes are cast, the counting of the votes can become quite complicated. A voter gives preferential ranking to all candidates on the ballot by marking a first choice, second choice, third choice, etc. In counting, only the first choices are counted to begin with. Since no more than five candidates can each garner 17 percent of the votes, that number is determined to be the percentage of votes needed to win.

In the first count, any candidate with at least 17 percent of the vote is thus declared a winner. Any votes in excess of 17 percent received by a candidate are then distributed between the voters' second choices.

In the days of paper ballots, when it was determined that a candidate had enough votes in the counting, any other votes received for that candidate not yet counted were given to the second-place choices. But since computers can do more difficult math, the distribution of second choices is now done in a more complicated way. The ratio of votes received to the votes needed to win is determined, and that portion in excess is given to the second place choices. For example, if a candidate receives 34 percent of the votes cast, twice the amount needed to win, the candidate would receive one-half of those votes. The other half of the votes would be allocated to each voter's second-choice candidate.

After the excess winners' votes are recast, there may still not be five candidates with 17 percent of the vote. Then the candidate receiving the fewest votes is declared a loser and the votes of those who made that losing candidate their first choice will be redistributed to the candidates named as their second choices. But if those additional votes cause a candidate to have more than 17 percent of the vote, these excess votes are redistributed among the remaining candidates on the basis of third choices named. This reshuffling of the votes cast to second, third or whatever choice continues until five candidates have achieved a vote of 17 percent and are declared the winners.

To select the mayor, Jascourt suggests that all first-place votes be counted. If no candidate receives a majority of votes cast, the votes for the least popular candidate are recounted to the voters' second choices, and then those of the next least popular until one candidate accumulates a majority of votes.

Jascourt said that choice voting is successfully used in Australia and that most democracies use either a form of choice or cumulative voting. The cost of election campaigning is lower, he claimed, because it takes fewer votes to win. Minorities easily get elected.

Olson

Olson, who is also a College Park city councilmember, made a brief presentation in which he reported that Cambridge, Mass., has successfully used the choice system since the 1940s. With a nine-member council, a candidate can be elected with 14 percent of the vote. There has always been a Republican on the council and racial minorities have also been represented. New York City also used choice voting in the '30s and '40s in the era when Fiorello La Guardia was elected mayor. However, this method was abandoned in the '50s. Cincinnati, Ohio, also used this method from 1925 to 1957.

Olson said that Illinois used cumulative voting to elect its legislature until 1980 in a system where three legislators were elected from each district. Amarillo, Texas, is now the largest city to have cumulative voting, he said. Around 50 cities now use this method of election as a result of Voting Rights Act lawsuits. He claimed that where it has been used, the number of women participating and being elected to office has increased.

Questions, Comments

Keith Chernikoff, a member of the Board of Elections, expressed concern that he would have only one-fifth the say in voting in choice voting and that it would disempower voters. Olson contended that this method would actually empower voters because it would provide greater representation to minorities. Cumulative voting is somewhat proportional in representing voters; choice voting is fully proportional, he said.

Another election boardmember, Dorothy Lauber, expressed concern about going to voting districts. As a former city clerk, she had heard horror stories from other clerks on the problems created when councilmembers are elected from districts.

Bill Uber, a resident for two and one-half years, said that Jascourt and Olson seem to make the assumption that the 11 pepperoni lovers have no consideration for mushroom lovers. He doesn't feel that way here. "What benefit is this in Greenbelt?" he asked. Olson said it would bring more voices to the table and help to increase understanding.

Sylvia Lewis, a former council candidate, said that she was interested in looking at different ways of electing the council. She said that now it is extremely hard for a non-incumbent to get elected and there is an extremely low turnout of voters. She also said that we should be concerned that only one African-American has ever run for council.

Chernikoff, however, contended that the turnout has a lot to do with the people running. "Shoe leather is what wins," he said. "This is a consensus town. We work towards the middle."

Ott asked how slates affected these methods. Olson said they were neither pro-slate or anti-

A Delightful Canoe Trip Launches Outdoor Program

by Jonathan Murray

There was some skepticism that our September 28 canoe trip offered through Greenbelt Outdoor Recreation Programs (Gorp) would end up landlocked with the forecast calling for high winds. As luck would have it, Saturday morning dawned to clear blue skies, calm winds, and excited participants. Following a circle of introductions, it was off to the put-in site. Once arriving at the Patuxent River (near Jug Bay Natural Area) we were pleased to find that the prior two days of rain had swollen the river considerably, creating a nice current to carry us down the river.

After a moment of anxiety each of the paddlers stepped off terra firma and into the canoes. The first hour followed with grunts and laughter as canoeists collided with downed tree branches, each other and the riverbank while they adapted to their paddles. Within a short time everyone gained their sea legs and the paddling became low fluid motions. The canoes skimmed along easily with the tide and the wind at our backs pushed us along our way. While our ears enjoyed the sounds of leaves gently singing in the breeze, our eyes drank up the sights, and our skin soaked up some rays – is this heaven or what?

After a short stop for lunch the scenery abruptly changed from an enclosed river to an open tidal marsh populated most notably by the numerous stands of native wild rice.

Even though we missed the blooming of the wild rice on this trip (which attracts an immense variety of wildlife), we were still blessed with viewing red-shouldered hawks, turkey vultures, osprey, red-winged blackbirds and painted turtles.

All in all we had a great time, and after five hours on the river, everyone was happy to stretch their legs.

For more information about this trip or future programs contact the Greenbelt Recreation Department at 301-397-2200 or email greenbeltadventures@yahoo.com.

slate. He also said they have been used in other places that have non-partisan elections.

Robert Auerbach, another former council candidate, said that he had read quite a lot about election methods. Most democratic countries use a proportional system. He contended that with such systems more women and more representatives of ethnic groups get elected. He said that Greenbelters would be better off with such a system.

Olson was asked if voters would understand the method of counting in choice voting. He replied that some would and some wouldn't, but that most would trust the vote counters if the choice method were used.

Doug Love said that he didn't understand the math completely, but that he did understand the intent. He thought that choice voting would be a more consistent procedure of voting and allow him more control over his vote.

Ott asked how proportional voting increased voter turnout. Olson cited Amarillo, where he said the number of votes has "shot up" since cumulative voting was instituted. Voters saw that their votes count for more, that they counted towards electing someone that they really wanted to elect.

Ott believes that the Board of Elections will probably meet again in the latter part of this month to consider voting methods. At that time, the board could decide to further explore questions which boardmembers might raise. Or it could decide to submit a report to the council, with or without a recommendation, based upon the information it has already gathered.
