City Focuses on Service Available for Seniors

by Barbara Hopkins

Greenbelt is "an inspired place for seniors," according to the report by the Greenbelt Senior Citizens Advisory Committee (SCAC) to the city council on its open forum held on Septem-

Councilmembers heard more about and from its senior citizens at its regular meeting on December 15.

Resource Advocate

In the short time since the position was created, Greenbelt's Community Resource Advocate (CRA) has garnered a following of loyal supporters who appeared before the city council on December 15 to petition council to make the position permanent. The position, created under a NORC (Naturally Occurring Retirement Community) program with funding that is expected to last until the end of this fiscal year, was filled for the first time last March when the city hired Cristal Parker Batey. The mandate of the office is to act as a clearing house to guide seniors to information and benefits available to them through government, public and private programs.

Phyllis Budin, addressing council as spokesperson for the SCAC, requested that the CRA position continue. In making the request, Budin praised Batey, saying she thought Batey "can really help our community very much."

Leonie Penney also spoke in support of the idea, saying she was speaking for herself as well as Friends of the Resource Advocate, a group which evolved from a subcommittee of the nowdissolved assistance in living task force. Penney said people's lives have been "touched and changed" by Batey and she encouraged council to actively pursue funding now to continue the position. Mayor Judith Davis assured Penney that she sees the value of the CRA and, barring a "tragedy" in the budget, funding for the position would be found "one way or the other." She said staff has already been working on this issue.

City Manager Michael McLaughlin said the city is exploring the possibility of joining forces with College Park and Bowie in applying for a grant from the Robert Woods Johnson Foundation, which is accepting applications to fund pilot programs for communities with at least 10,000 seniors. The effects of two considerations remain to be seen for this possibility: whether three combined communities would be eligible for such a grant and whether Greenbelt, with a program in place already, would be eligible for a pilot program. In any case, this is one source of funding that staff is

by James Giese

This is the true story of the tragic loss of the promising life of a young woman, with strong ties to Greenbelt, due to a hit-andrun accident by a driver under the influence of alcohol. It is also about a loving mother who experienced the trauma of seeing and caring for her comatose child as her life slipped away, who helped to capture the runaway driver responsible for her daughter's death and then not only forgave him but made it her responsibility to see that he had a chance to make a better life for him-

Jessica Lynne Wacker was a 20-year-old with a promising future. She was smart as a whip, talented, a friend to many, attractive and working her way through college. Although not raised in Greenbelt, she had strong roots to the community. Her grandparents were former Greenbelt City Clerk Gudrun and Charles Mills. Her mother, Monica, and aunt Gina were raised in Greenbelt. She often visited mom-mom and pop-pop at their home. As a child she participated in Camp Pine Tree and other city recreational programs. Sometimes she would stay at the city office with her grandmother until her mother could pick her up after a recreation program session. An avid reader, she would find a quiet spot in which to read and keep out of harm's way.

At age 20 Jessica had completed two years of study at the University of Maryland, Baltimore campus. Taking a break from her courses, she was working full time as a waitress at Bill Bateman's Bistro in Severna Park. She worked until the restaurant closed, preferring the late night work because the tips were more gener-

In March 2002 she was staying with her grandmother. Charles Mills, who died this May, suffered from Lewy Body Dementia and had been placed in a nursing home. Jessica was keeping company and giving support to her mom-mom.

On the morning of March 23, Jessica was returning home from work on the Baltimore-Washington Parkway when her car broke down. She pulled to the side of the road, called for roadside assistance and waited.

Demolished

U.S. Park Police found Jessica unconscious in her demolished car. The car had rolled over several times. Near her car was an abandoned, wrecked minivan.

Jessica's mother, Monica Mills Johnston, relates the story from

City Gets "Liveable" Grant, But Projects Are Scaled Down

by Barbara Hopkins

Greenbelt has received a muinitiative of County Executive enforcement, McLaughlin said. Jack Johnson. Because the city had requested $118,000 but received only $85,000, proposals for using the money had to be scaled down.

At the December 15 meeting of the Greenbelt City Council, City Manager Michael McLaughlin shared with council how the city plans to use the funds. He said $35,000 would go for playground improvements at Schrom Hills Park and another small park. He said the city has already upgraded 18 of the 31 parks deemed by staff to need it.

Since some residents of Springhill Lake have problems getting to the city center to avail themselves of the services of Greenbelt CARES, $20,000 will be used to enable CARES to provide some services in that neigh-

The city's grant proposal had requested $10,000 for volunteer incentives, which McLaughlin described as the "least defined" project in the proposal. With the amount received substantially lower than that requested, he said the city will allocate no funds for this project.

The city will also take advantage of that part of the Liveable Communities program that will make resources from the County Redevelopment Authority available at no charge to help improve Roosevelt Center.

7 p.m. to 1 a.m. – Greenbelt New Year events

The Greenbelt Police and city staff have been looking into a variety of traffic issues in Greenbelt East and attempting to improve the situations noted, according to memorandums furnished by the police and others to City Manager Michael McLaughlin.

Left Turns

During morning rush hours, traffic on eastbound Greenbelt Road trying to turn onto Hanover Parkway is backing up in the left turn lane. Traffic must make the turn on a green arrow. This has caused some scofflaws to bypass the left turn lane and turn from the left through lane onto Hanover Parkway on the green light.

Master Police Officer Scott Kaiser reported in a December 3 memorandum that he and other officers had been monitoring the intersection on nine different days since November 12 and had written 19 violations. The most had occurred on the first day of surveillance, seven. Kaiser observed that several times officers stopped school buses and Metro buses committing these violations. Apparently word of the city enforcement efforts has gotten out, as the number of violations declined after the first day. Also, police sent letters to Metro and the school bus lot informing them of the violations observed.

Speeders

Another issue brought to the attention of police was speeding in Greenbelt East on Megan Lane and Ora Glen Drive. Over a two month period, Kaiser conducted speed checks on various streets in Greenbelt East without observing any violations except for two on Ora Glen Drive. These checks were made at various times of the day. Kaiser said in his memorandum, "I do not doubt the fact that there are people speeding but it is not happening while we are sitting over there.'

"Speeders seem to be the exception, not the rule on Ora Glen Drive," Kaiser wrote in an August 2 memorandum. The average speed of the 80-90 cars traveling the street in an hour was 34 miles per hour. The posted speed limit is 30 miles per hour. The highest speed observed was 48 miles per hour. Kaiser noted that with one exception, all the vehicles stopped were local residents who stated that they did not realize they were traveling as fast as they were.

Kaiser believes that police enforcement needs to be concentrated in the residential area of Hanover Parkway where speeds in excess of 15 miles above the speed limit have been regularly observed.

Traffic Calming

Planning and Community Development Director Celia Craze also has provided McLaughlin with a memorandum on the commercial section of Ora Glen Drive. This one deals with the feasibility of traffic calming there. She says that a survey done in 1998 indicated that traffic calming was justified because 85th percentile speeds were more than seven miles per hour over the speed limit. Craze recommends that initially traffic calming be done in a manner similar to that done on Cherrywood Lane in Springhill Lake. "We would first develop a striping plan," she recommended, "which would accomplish a number of traffic calming design objectives - road narrowing, creation of horizontal displacements, provid-

Donations Update, More Help Needed

Starting November 25 to this date the legendary generosity of Greenbelters has been once again demonstrated. Thanks to the generosity of Greenbelters from all over the city and donors from neighboring communities, we collected enough money to send each of the fire victim families checks for over $450. They will receive the money in time for the Christmas holidays.

Unfortunately, because of their great losses, more donations would be greatly appreciated. We have been told that some people thought there was a deadline for sending in donations that had passed. This is not the case. We will be able to receive donations through the end of May 2004. So if some of you wanted to give but thought it was too late or if you have not been aware of the fund drive, you still have an opportunity to help the fire victims.

As our manager, Steve Bupp, indicated in last week's News Review, the fire victims have been very patient and cooperative. I have been very impressed with their indomitable courage in the face of adversity.

Checks should be made out to Greenbriar Condos Ph. II – Donation Fund and may be mailed or brought to Greenbriar Condominiums Phase II, 7600 Hanover Parkway, Suite 101, Greenbelt, MD 20770. Thank you so much for your help.

Growing Up In Greenbelt

by Gloria Shelton Drake

At the beginning of the Second World War, the families who were first to move into the Defense homes, built in Greenbelt to last "for the duration" were often without the male head of the household.

My father was in the Navy serving in the South Pacific. He was on the Tinian in the Mariannas when the Enola Gay took off from there to bomb Japan with the first atomic bomb used by the U.S.

In those days Greenbelt High School had six grades - 7 through 12. I was in the seventh grade when Dad returned home and like many other families my parents had to relearn to share responsibility for my upbringing. I was often at the Drop Inn, a Quonset hut donated to Greenbelt to use as a Youth Center. It was a wonderful place. It had a jukebox, snack bar, dancing, romancing and, oh yes, a study room.

Greenbelt had tennis courts and the only public swimming pool in the county. In the summer when we weren't playing tennis or in the pool, we were sitting on the hillside beside the pool socializing.

During the school year, we attended social functions and athletic activities in Greenbelt Center Elementary School (now the Community Center). There were school plays and operettas, basketball games, formal dances and All Greenbelt Night. At that time, we took for granted walking to all of those wonderful events that filled our lives with friendly competition and pure fun!

I imagine on any night that activities were scheduled, 99 percent of the students and their parents attended and the other one percent were too ill to get out of the house.

We went on hayrides to Great Falls, Va. in the back of Wesley Bryan's truck. The Wilson Line took us down the Potomac on moonlight cruises. There was a grown up "nite club" for teens in Hyattsville, called Hy-Tac, where I saw some of the best dancers I have ever seen in my life.

Only a few of my friends had part time jobs, usually in the drug store, gas station or 5-and 10-cent store. The rest of us spent our spare time supporting our school, participating in community activities and going on dates.

Dating in those days was tricky and usually involved going to the movies.

A girl would often buy her own ticket and candy bar. You would arrange to sit next to a vacant seat and then the fellow you were interested in, who had been waiting for you to get settled, would come in and join you. After the movie, the route home might include a walk around the lake.

On one of the first warm spring Sundays, a group of us would go into D.C., which meant riding on the Capital Transit bus and streetcar. We would tour the monuments and have a hot dog on the Mall. I can't remember a single incident that ever made me feel uncomfortable. Those were the days!

When it got really hot, the folks would take me to one of the bay beaches for the day. What a journey that was! We left at the same time as everyone else. That meant it was bumper to bumper on a two-lane road for the whole trip. Mom had made a picnic lunch, we took a quick dip and then the trip home took up what was left of the day.

At the end of summer there was the Labor Day celebration and then back to school and everything started all over again.

We grew up in a town where everyone had a new home and all the furniture that they needed for a reasonable price. All the fathers had jobs and with the same income. Most of the moms stayed home and their jobs were taking care of us.

Sounds like something from science fiction? It was a government experiment that succeeded and to those who grew up here it was paradise.

Volunteer to Be A Host Family

In 2004 people can help the children of New York City by volunteering to be host families for The Fresh Air Fund. Volunteering as a family is a chance to spend time together and to introduce children to volunteering and community service.

Since 1877, New York City children growing up in low-income neighborhoods have experienced the joys of summer in suburban and small-town communities through The Fresh Air Fund's Friendly Town Program. By welcoming visitors into their homes during the summer, host families give Fresh Air children a break from the sometimes dangerous, hot and crowded city streets.

For more information on hosting a Fresh Air child, call Frances James at 301-808-1402 or The Fresh Air Fund at 1-800-367-0003 or visit the fund's website at www.freshair.org.

Art Sale Extended At New Deal Café

Artists can hang their art work at the New Deal Café this month - and the show is being held over through January. OK, so it may not be the Smithsonian, but people do buy art work here and the New Deal is Greenbelt's neighborhood café. Last week the café received 19 pieces of art, but there must be more than 19 artists living in Greenbelt. So bring one piece of art work, no larger than 16" by 20", to the café this Sunday from 3 to 6 p.m. The goal of the show is to give Greenbelt artists an opportunity to make a holiday sale. This is a good time of year to find a home for that masterpiece that's being saved for the perfect owner. Call Barbara Simon at 301-474-2192.

Student Animation Showcase

On New Year's Eve the "Student Animation Showcase" will play at the Old Greenbelt Theatre in Roosevelt Center at 10:15 p.m. This show, which premiered earlier this month, features original animation created by area filmmakers. The program is suitable for all ages.

Although this screening is part of the Greenbelt New Year Celebration, it is a free event and wristbands are not required. The program runs until about 11:30 p.m. and viewers may enter at any time after 10:15.

The event is produced by the GAVA/GATE Animation Program and is sponsored by the Greenbelt Association for the Visual Arts, Greenbelt Access Television and ASIFA Washington. Funding was provided by the City of Greenbelt, Greenbelt Foundation for the Arts, Prince George's Arts Council and Prince George's County. For further information call 301-474-2192.

Celebrating Hanukkah At Mishkan Torah

Hanukkah marks the successful revolt by Jews against Hellenistic Greeks, who had desecrated their temples. According to Rabbi Jonathan Cohen of Mishkan Torah, it is a midwinter festival that coincides with the end of the Hebrew month, when both sunlight and moonlight reach their lowest ebb. He says, "It is an act of faith that when we have the least amount of natural light, we make our own." The lighting of the eight-candle menorah - one for each day of the eight-day holiday - symbolizes the rededication of the temple in Jerusalem and "the celebration of the right to be yourself and stand up against the powers that be."

On Sunday, December 21, members of Mishkan Torah and their families gathered to worship and celebrate the second day of the Jewish holiday. Above, Eli Marsh wraps a Christmas gift for a family in need. At right, Lisa Marsh, right, assists younger members of the synagogue at the craft table. Dreidel-making and "Jewish Jeopardy" were also part of the activities at the Hanukkah party.

No advance registration is required.

Two Recreation Department instructors will be on hand to introduce guests to performing arts opportunities at the Community Center. From 2 to 4 p.m. Recreation Department ballroom dance instructor Francis Solomon will demonstrate a variety of fun and elegant social dances.

From 2:30 to 4 p.m. Greenbelt musician and Recreation Department voice instructor Izolda will lead a "community sing."

Participants will learn some basic techniques to connect body, breath and voice. Guests can then put these techniques into practice by joining in a joyful group sing-along. Everyone with and without experience is welcome to participate in both workshops. Izolda and Solomon will offer classes at the Community Center during the winter session beginning in early Janu-

Children's Events

With all the human New Year revelers returned home to rest, it's time for the animals to come out and celebrate! On Sunday, January 4 children ages four and up are invited to the Greenbelt Community Center for an international New Year arts party introducing traditions from China and other countries. Guests will celebrate through story, song and a parade of animal puppets which the children will make with guest artist Sondra Holland.

Holland is a pianist, painter and professional music and arts educator who recently moved to Greenbelt from New York state. Her workshop will take place from 1 to 3 p.m. If possible, bring a white sock to transform into a puppet and an instrument for the parade through the Community Center. Instruments might include kazoos, tambourines, bells of any kind, metal spoons, pot lids, harmonicas or anything else that makes noise!

This activity is offered in conjunction with the monthly Artful Afternoon program presented by the Greenbelt Recreation Department. Artful Afternoons take place on the first Sunday of the month from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Greenbelt

From 1 to 5 p.m. the Community Center's Artists in Residence will welcome visitors of all ages to a studio open house.

Two exhibits will be open for viewing, including the group show "Art Exchange" and a Greenbelt Museum presentation of the editorial cartoons of Isadore "Izzy" Parker. The Museum will also offer guided tours of the historic home located at 10-B Crescent Road.

All Artful Afternoon activities are free and open to the public. Children must be accompanied by an adult. For more information contact John Norden, arts assistant at 301-397-2208 or jnorden@ci-greenbelt.md.us.

Golden Agers Enjoy Music of Marvin Hamlisch

Members of the Greenbelt Golden Age Club attended a National Symphony Orchestra Holiday Pops Concert on December 10 at the Kennedy Center. Following the performance, the Golden Agers also attended a reception with conductor and famous composer Marvin Hamlisch. The oldest person in attendance, Florence Holly, 94, was asked by Hamlisch to request a song for him to play on the piano. Holly named "My Old Kentucky Home," not one of Hamlisch's many songs. However, Hamlisch played it and made it his song with original lyrics that mentioned historic Greenbelt and interspersed the tune with some of his original melodies. Afterward Hamlisch met Holly and joined her for photographs.

Gypsy Strings Will Perform Concert

The Gypsy Strings, frequent guest performers at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center, will give a free holiday performance there on December 28 at 1:30 p.m. The center is located at 3900 Harewood Road, N.E., Washington, D.C.

Learn to Sing and Dance In the Community Center

by Chris Cherry

For Greenbelters who make a New Year's resolution to learn to sing or dance or just to enjoy themselves more in 2004, the Greenbelt Community Center is offering new classes with two outstanding Greenbelt-based teaching artists. Folk Nouveau singer-songwriter Izolda will be offering her very popular "Learn to Sing" classes and champion ballroom dancer Francis Solomon will teach three different ballroom dancing classes. Both artists will be on hand for the January 4 Artful Afternoon at the Community Center, providing free workshops for aspiring singers and dancers.

Izolda

Singer-songwriter Izolda is familiar to many Greenbelters from her CD "Sound The Deep Waters," her appearances at the New Deal Café and her classes. Her own music is a fusion of jazz, classical and folk, with Eastern European and Middle-Eastern influences. Born in Moldova in the former Soviet Union, Izolda began studying classical violin at the age of five. She later added recorder and guitar to her instrumental repertoire. She has sung with the a capella trio Fleur-de-Lis, the folk ensemble Kiva and singer Gina DeSimone. "I believe in the transformative and magical power of music," Izolda says and I strive to bring that across in both my lyrics and my melodies."

Students in her classes say they experience that magical power firsthand. Izolda's beginners' class requires no singing experience. The class provides a relaxed atmosphere where students can focus on development of the singing voice, confidence and joy in singing. Both the beginners and the advanced beginners' courses culminate in a recital at the New Deal Café. The singing classes are scheduled for Wednesday evenings in the Community Center.

Francis Solomon

Francis Solomon was the 1973 U.S. champion in the Rising Stars division of the World Ballroom Dance Championship in Blackpool, England, in both Latin and standard categories. Locally, he has been an instructor at the NASA Goddard Ballroom Dance Club, dance director of the College Park Ballroom Dance Club and the Jewish Ballroom Dance Club. He is currently the resident dance instructor of the Johns Hopkins Ballroom Dance Club.

Solomon is excited about teaching in Greenbelt where his young sons are enthusiastic participants in the Greenbelt Recreation Department's summer camps. The dancing classes will be held on Monday evenings in the Community Center. Three different classes will focus on standard ballroom (foxtrot, waltz and tango); Latin (rhumba, cha-cha and samba) and nightclub (Argentine tango).

Registration for all classes is open now. The dance classes begin on January 5 and the singing classes begin on January 7. Prospective students can stop by the Community Center's Artful Afternoon on Sunday, January 4 at 2 p.m. to meet the teachers and participate in free workshops. For information, call 301-397-2208.

give a brief summary of his company's report on the city's Assistance in Living Program Needs Assessment. Sukol contracted with the city to survey senior residents about issues that would help them "age in place," or remain in their own homes as long as possible. Councilmembers have the report and copies will also be given to the Senior Citizens Advisory Committee, Friends of the Resource Advocate and the NORC Supportive Services Center, which provided funding for the survey.

It so happened that December 15 was Sukol's birthday. He told council he wanted to "do my part to contribute to aging."

Sukol briefly described his company's survey methods. He said that nearly 150 seniors were interviewed extensively and several hundred others were given shorter surveys. The five main issues found from the surveys were transportation, health care, home safety and maintenance, access to information and finances, he said.

After the survey results were compiled, a panel of experts were asked what action the city should take to provide for the discovered needs of seniors. Some results were surprising, said Sukol, such as the lack of awareness about information already available to people.

Probably no surprise to Greenbelters was Sukol's response to Councilmember Konrad Herling's question regarding whether the surveys discovered anything that distinguished Greenbelt from other ar-Sukol answered that Greenbelt seems to have a sense of community and neighborhood belonging that is "very uncommon elsewhere." He also said his surveyors noticed a lot of willingness to help, noting that in his opinion one of the most difficult solutions is organizing people in a community to help each other.

Davis spoke about GIVES, Greenbelt Intergenerational Volunteer Exchange Service, which serves in just this way. She said she is often surprised that people do not know about GIVES. Sukol agreed that GIVES could play a role in actions the city may take in response to the survey.

A worksession where council will have a more intensive review of the report has been scheduled for January 21.

ing more clearly defined pedestrian spaces. After these markings are in place, we can evaluate the efficacy of the approach in terms of speed reduction, as well as possible displaced traffic impacts on adjacent roads." Later, a capital project could be considered to address traffic calming, pedestrian safety and streetscape improvements.

Guard Rail

The State Highway District Engineer has been requested by the police to consider adding a guard rail next to a wooded area that is below street grade on the north side of Greenbelt Road east of the Eleanor Roosevelt High School. Several accidents have occurred there with cars leaving the roadway and crashing into the wooded area. Last year, one vehicle crashed into a telephone pole in this area resulting in a fatality. Police also noted a sidewalk in this area is dangerously close to the roadway.

Standing Water
The State Highway Administration District Engineer has also been advised of a standing water problem on the south side of Greenbelt Road near the new CVS store. The problem was first referred to the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission which advised that the cause was surface water and not the result of a water main leak. Police are concerned that the area will become unsafe in freezing weather.

Doug Peters Presents Grants for City Activities

by Diane Oberg

The last regular meeting of the 34th Greenbelt City Council started off on a very positive note. County Councilman Douglas Peters presented grants from his discretionary fund to support various activities in the city. The grants included $5,000 for Greenbelt CARES, $2,000 for the Advisory Committee on Education, $2,000 for the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum, $3,000 for the Recreation Department and $3,000 for renovation of the Old Greenbelt Theatre building.

Council also learned of a free fire safety program and appointed new members to city boards.

Fire Safety

Director of Planning and Community Development Celia Craze displayed what she called the most important tools available to residents to protect themselves from fire – "a $4 smoke detector and a 99 cent battery." Residents can contact her office (301-345-5417) to schedule a free fire safety inspection. City inspectors will identify potentially unsafe conditions in the home and provide free smoke detectors and proper guidance on their placement.

Craze noted that county code requires detectors outside of every sleeping room and on every level of the home. Proper placement relative to ceilings and walls is required to ensure proper operation of the devices. She assured citizens that no violations will be issued as a result of these inspections.

Other Actions

Council unanimously adopted a revised mission statement for the arts. The statement affirms "the creativity of all people and the power of art to transform individual and community life."

Using Local Law Enforcement Block Grant funds from the U.S. Department of Justice, the city will purchase several video cameras to be mounted into police patrol cars.

Earlier in the meeting, council held a public hearing on the grant, as required by federal law. However, no one in the crowd that filled all the chairs, the side bench and most of the floor wished to address this issue.

Chayla Lar was appointed to the Recycling and Environment Committee. Hugh Jascourt and Sieglinde Peterson were reappointed to the Employee Relations Board.

Legion Honors Pearl Harbor Survivors

by Al Gieger

The Greenbelt American Post 136 hosted a ceremony and banquet honoring Pearl Harbor survivors from the State of Maryland on Sunday, December 7. The program by the American Legion Department of Maryland honored four survivors who related their experiences on "a day that shall live in infamy."

Roger Thomas, 84, was on watch at Kaneohe Bay Naval Air Station the morning of December 7, 1941. When he heard the first bomb explode he thought it was a training drill and remarked, "Those guys should be more careful, they're going to kill somebody." When he saw the planes were Japanese he said, "holy mackerel" or words to that effect, he said in an interview. He reported that all the American planes on the ground were destroyed. Five minutes later Pearl Harbor was struck. Thomas, who is president of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association and who lives in Frederick, gave the keynote address and retold his fascinating story.

Alvis Harris, Post 233, Sykesville, related his recollection of the chaos and terror of the attack. His ship was the first one out of Pearl Harbor and into the open sea. It escaped destruction.

Jock Wogner, Post 66, Bowie, was in the Army Air Corps on December 7, 1941, but was in the hospital where he witnessed the attack. He went on to fly 73 missions, including 23 bombing runs. He was again on sick call the day the plane he was assigned to was shot down and the crew captured by the Japanese.

Michael Palchefsky of Laurel, not a member of the American Legion, was in the band of the USS California. They were on deck waiting to play the National Anthem when the attack occurred and the California was sunk. He and other survivors were able to make their way to nearby Ford Island where they watched the continuing assault.

Also honored for long-time service to the Legion and the country were Thomas Keyes, Jr., of Post 183, Parkville, and Wilfun L. Van Sant, Jr., of Post 109, Arbutus. They are both veterans of World War II and have been Legionnaires for 51 and 58 years respectively. They were given the Legion's Distinguished Service awards.

Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 hosts the Department of Maryland's Honors Program annually. They also sponsor many city-wide programs and activities. The Legion is an integral part of the Greenbelt community.

Happy Holidays!

this point in a victim's impact statement she read to Judge Joseph P. Manck of the Anne Arundel County Circuit Court: (Jessica's father died eight years earlier and her mother had remarried.)

"When the officer called me that night, my first thought was that she was dead. I can't explain why, I think a mother just knows things When I saw Officer Knox in the hospital parking lot, his face confirmed what I felt. Inside I was told that she had suffered a serious head injury

"When we finally got to see her that night I was surprised at how beautiful and peaceful she looked. I knew that they had removed the left side of her skull and I kept imagining that half of her face and head would be missing. Instead she just had her head bandaged with a large screw coming out of the top of it and she was on life support.

"Every moment of every day after March 23rd I waited and waited. Would she live, would she die? Would I be called into that room where they take the families to tell me that nothing more could be done and that she was brain dead Every moment . . . we looked for the next milestone, a toe movement, a twitch of the face, or a pupil with some sign of life in it."

After two weeks, Jessica was transferred to Kernan Hospital, which has an early coma emergence program involving medication to awaken the brain. She did open her eyes, but there was no recognition. After three weeks she was returned to the Maryland Shock Trauma Center. Her condition slowly deteriorated.

"In time, it became apparent that Jessie was not going to 'wake up," Monica continued in her impact statement. "I insisted that the doctor who operated on her initially replace her skull bone on June 12 . . . Jessie came home on July ninth."

Johnston took care of her daughter, feeding her, bathing her, giving her medication and otherwise caring for her. Her condition continued to deterio-

Goodbye

"I had been sleeping in a chair next to her bed every night for the last week of her life," Johnston continued. "That night I knew I had to leave her alone. After the hospice nurse left at midnight, I kissed my daughter her how proud I had been of her and how blessed I was to have had the honor of being her mother. I told her I loved her, then I told her to go home to God. At 4:30 a.m. on the 13th of August I was awakened by a soft touch on my arm. I knew she was telling me goodbye. My Jessie was dead."

Detectives Michelle Ludwick and Michael Korman of the U.S. Park Police pursued this case tenaciously, according to Johnston. The police had quickly identified a suspect as the driver of the minivan the night of the accident but finding him was another matter. He had family in both Washington and Frederick but never was around. When Jessica died, the hit-and-run driver was still at large. Johnston said that Park Police officers assured her at the funeral service that they would continue to vigorously

nursue the case

Press Conference

This June 4 members of the U.S. Park Police held a widelycovered press conference announcing that James Ernest Penamon, a 23-year-old Washington, D.C. resident, had been indicted by a Maryland grand jury on March 7 with eight crimes, the most serious being negligent manslaughter with an auto. If found guilty of the manslaughter charge, Penamon could have been subject to a maximum penalty of a fine of $5,000 and 10 years imprisonment. Johnston was present at the press conference and made a public plea carried on many radio and television stations for Penamon to turn himself in.

That night Penamon's mother drove him to the Greenbelt Park Police station where he surrendered, was charged by police and taken into custody. At the time of his arraignment, Penamon had five previous convictions, two of which were for driving under the influence of alcohol and a suspended/revoked driver's license, had failed to appear in court and had outstanding warrants, Johnston learned from police.

Police warned Johnston that the Penamon case would probably not go to trial but that instead the matter would be adjudicated with a plea bargain on a lesser charge. On November 20 Penamon pleaded guilty to homicide with a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol with the prosecutor's concurrence on a sentence of not less than two or more than four years in prison to be imposed, although the maximum penalty that could be imposed was five years.

Forgiveness

Johnston watched Penamon plead guilty. Then she handed his lawyer a letter telling Penamon that she had forgiven him.

Johnston did make these requests, however. First, she asked that Penamon serve in a state correctional facility at least 145 days, the length of time her daughter was in a coma before she died. She also asked that during that time he get his G.E.D. and that he undergo alcohol and drug treatment. Also, once he is on probation that he be required to speak at MADD Victim Impact Panels. She also requested an opportunity to meet with Penamon privately after sentencing.

midnight, I kissed my daughter goodbye for the last time. I told her how proud I had been of her and how blessed I was to have had the honor of being her mother. I told her I loved her, then I told her to go home to God. At 4320 a.m. on the 13th purposely cause deep pain to you, your family, your friends and the community at large," he said in part. "I appreciate your willingness to forgive me and it is a burden lifted. I found it hard, almost impossible to forgive myself. My life has been scarred . . ." Penamon also agreed to meet with Johnston, enroll in Alcoholic's Anonymous and offer himself to community service "in honor of your family" equal to 145 days.

While Penamon told Johnston in his letter that "my family and friends have been inflicted with pain and hurt" as a result of his negligence, no family member or friend was in court in support of Penamon. Johnston, who at each court session had the support of her family, friends and Jessica's friends, was troubled that there was no one there for him

On December 2 Judge Manck sentenced Penamon to the maximum sentence of five years in a Maryland correctional institution. While the judge agreed to the two to four years reached in the plea bargain, he did not want the correctional system to accidentally parole him before he had served 145 days, according to Johnston. The judge agreed to come back on April 26, the 146th day following sentencing, for a modification hearing. (Judges have the authority to reconsider and amend their sentencing at a later date, a controversial procedure unique to Maryland.) At that time the judge is to consider amending the sentence to the agreed two-to-four years and permit any remaining time to be served in a county facility.

Meeting

Before being transferred to Baltimore for incarceration in a state institution, Johnston did meet privately with Penamon. Johnston said that he was scared to meet with her but she felt that he seemed to be better after doing it. She said that she felt sorry for him sitting there, but she also felt satisfaction. He had admitted guilt, he didn't make any excuses and he expressed remorse to her.

"I don't hate him," she said.
"I can understand how it came to be. He has no family support, no community support. He has a lot of strikes against him. I feel responsible to at least give him the opportunities to come out the better for it."

"Jessica is dead," she said, "we can't change that, but this guy isn't. And I'm still here. We were put into each other's lives for some reason. He is a part of my life now. I could choose to hate him, but I choose not to."

by Elaine D. Jones

Now that diversity has reached the North Pole (Rudolph was a different kind of reindeer), I'd like to share a true story from the not-too-long-ago in honor of John Henry's 75th Christmas.

While working at St. Elizabeth's Psychiatric Hospital in the early '70s, my husband started a tradition of playing Santa. Personality-wise, John Henry was a natural. Except for ruddy cheeks and a white skin, he really looked authentic in the hospital's sumptuous antique velvet suit trimmed with thick fur and the gorgeous silky wig and beard that cascaded over his shoulders. Sooty boots, a brassbuckled wide leather belt, white gloves and his own gold-rimmed specs put lesser Santa wannabes to shame. With my help to rig three suspended feather pillows, his metamorphosis was complete.

In red and green, I dressed our pre-schoolers, Nicholas, Nathan, and Corita Kate, as elves. They skipped in, ringing sleighbells to herald Santa's arrival and gave out gifts from his bulging sack. They were adorable! Even the sickest and most way-out patients reached out, smiling; hugs and kisses abounded.

One late December day, Santa stuffed himself behind the wheel of our station wagon (reindeer were not allowed in Lakeside North Apartments), elves and gifts piled in the back seat and headed down Kenilworth Avenue toward Southeast D.C. A woman driver glanced over from her lane, did a double-take and proceeded to blow her horn and frantically point until Santa pulled over on the shoulder behind her. She ran up, yelling "Santa, Santa, you have to come see my kids!" and grabbed his hand. Santa (more than a little suspicious about her "empty" car) thought, "Oh, great - no pocket in these pants for cash or wallet" - but up popped two little heads from the back seat. Speechless, incredulous, but soon enamored, the children laughed and hugged Santa. "Thank you, thank you, Santa! My kids have never ever seen a black Santa," their mother said. Passing drivers braked, honked and waved and Santa continued his rounds to locked wards, churches and foster homes, dropping in on staff parties and bringing home exhausted elves high on sugar.

One year, when Santa returned elfless, he was greeted with disappointed faces and choruses of "Where are your elves, Santa?" Alas, they'd graduated to studenthood.

John Henry, who dubbed himself "the original black Santa Claus," then began to visit the elves' elementary schools, John Carroll and Glenarden Woods, disrupting classes with joyous pandemonium, handing out candy canes; he was besieged by teachers vying to sit on his lap for a photo op. They whispered secret wishes in his ear and he loved it!

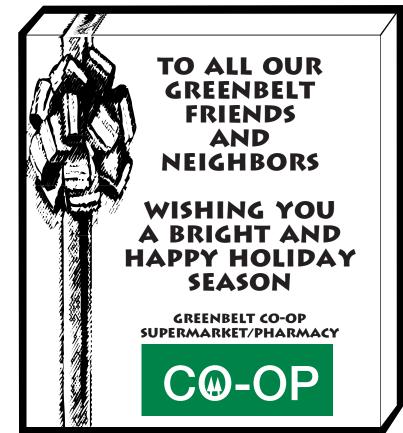

I'll never forget one very darkskinned fourth grader who eyed my husband for a long time before cautiously approaching to blurt out, "You're not the real Santa." Santa asked, "Why do you think that?" The boy moved close to whisper in his ear, "'Cause the real Santa Claus is white."

Well, the elves grew up and Santa grew a little tired of the hot heavy hair, the fat-bellied suit and the long hours. In retirement his domain shrank. He donned only Santa's plush red cap and shaking his sleighbells, John Henry dropped by the Coop, library, nursery school, credit union and gas station, giving holiday hugs, red carnations or candy and warm wishes to hardworking folks throughout Greenbelt. The Jones Family wishes that you may find joy and peace in this holiday season of goodwill to all.

Ask students what homework is and they will provide a list of descriptive words, many of them not very positive. Younger students say homework is fun. Older students say homework is tedious, annoying, boring, repetitive, difficult, unnecessary, punitive and unhealthy.

What is homework? Homework: teaches good study habits, reinforces skills, creates discipline, keeps the information fresh in the student's mind, helps students with memorization, gives students a chance to absorb information presented in class, stimulates students to learn more about a subject.

Here are suggestions to help make homework a learning experience:

Allow students to study in a way they do best. Some students study better with noise, others need a quiet area. Some students work better at a desk or table, others prefer working on the floor. Know which environment works best for the student.

Create a learning environment. Make sure there is good lighting. Make sure the student has the right supplies (appropriate textbooks, adequate paper, sharpened pencils, working pens, rulers). Make sure the student is well nourished and well rested before working on assignments. Encourage the student to use resources: the library, the computer, homework hotlines. Ultimately students should learn to complete homework independently, with the knowledge that parents and other resources are available as

Parents are an important part of homework. Parents can help by taking a positive interest in the child's schooling and by giving positive reinforcement for their efforts. Parents can support the process by helping the student read and understand directions and the assignment, discussing assignments with the student and checking over homework. Parents can remind the student of the importance of education and model this by keeping in close contact with the school and teacher and participating in the school PTA. Parents should be aware of homework policies and talk to teachers about their ideas about homework. This includes being aware of a homework hotline and how much time a student should be spending on specific assignments. Finally parents should know the policy regarding assignments turned in late or missed because of illness.

Teaching homework skills and incorporating positive learning strategies provides a structure that the students can use for the rest of their lives. The more students put into it, the more they will get out of it. The more involved the parent, the better off the student.
