Council's Budget Would Increase Property Tax Rate by Two Cents

by James Giese

The Greenbelt City Council quietly and doggedly went through a list of budget issues at its final budget worksession on May 17, reached tentative decisions one by one and wound up with a council budget package to be reconsidered at a public hearing on Monday, May 24 and adopted on June 7. The new budget calls for a two-cent increase in the property tax rate. City Manager Michael McLaughlin estimated that this would increase the tax bill on a previously assessed $180,000 home by about $140.

Until final adoption, any decision by the council can be changed. If the decision-making process which occurred at the worksession is any indication, further changes are possible as the positions of four councilmembers went back and forth as good arguments were made for or against a particular item. Holding steadfast for the most part, however, was Councilmember Rodney Roberts who opposed most additions to the budget in an effort to avoid a tax rate increase.

Issues

Council reached its decisions without rancor. Roberts, once he but increase the budget council did. In fact, not one single item proposed by McLaughlin and the city staff was cut except for a reserve budget of $100,000 to be used for unforeseen contingencies but apparently made available for the council to have some extra funds to play with. Council added 17 items to the budget, increasing the total by $405,400, cutting the reserve by $64,300 to bring the total budget for the general fund (the principal operating fund for city expenditures) to $19,067,300.

To offset the increased expenditures, council increased revenues other than property taxes by $202,000, of which $100,000 is to be realized from increased code enforcement inspection fees for rental properties and $62,000 as a result of notification that the city can expect to receive increased highway user shared revenues from the state. Each one-cent added to the tax rate is expected to bring in $135,400 in revenue.

said his piece, stayed quiet for the most part, realizing that he was outvoted. Neither of the two new councilmembers, Leta Mach or Konrad Herling, put forth their opinions so strongly as to stir up the passions of other councilmembers as was so often the case in prior years with longtime Councilmember Thomas White. Consequently, those in the audience and those watching at home on cable TV who enjoy a good councilmanic fight were disappointed.

Probably the most contentious issue was funding for a red light camera that staff for the last three years has proposed be removed. The camera in question has not brought in revenues from fines sufficient to pay for its cost of operation, unlike other cameras operated by the city. Whether this poor revenue showing is because the camera has effectively reduced violations as Roberts contended, or because traffic is so jammed up at the intersection that it prevents violations from occurring, as Mayor Judith Davis

City Council Endorses Post Office Plan for Greenbelt East Location

by Barbara Hopkins

The Greenbelt City Council voted unanimously at its May 10 meeting to follow staff recommendations to support the construction of a full-service postal facility at Hanover Parkway and Ora Glen Drive in Greenbelt East. The USPS was asked to pursue an agreement with an existing business for a Contract Postal Unit (CPU) in Roosevelt Center. The CPU would provide most of the services commonly sought at a full-service facility. Post office boxes, however, and the distribution center would be located at the Greenbelt East site.

Post Office Options

The vote followed years of negotiations to obtain the site on Ora Glen Drive and to clear covenants that would have prevented its use by the post office, the city sought retention of a retail postal facility at the post office's current location in Roosevelt Center. At a meeting on April 26, Timothy Haney, district manager for the Capital District of the USPS, told council that funding had been approved to construct the new facility but that USPS officials had determined that budget considerations would prevent the operation of two facilities within such a small area.

At that meeting, Haney offered council two choices: a full-service facility at the new site or retail operations at the current site with carrier and operational functions at the new site. He also presented the possibility of establishing a CPU providing retail services at a business in Roosevelt Center if the full-service facility were located at the new site. He said the USPS would provide guidance and publicity materials for a center business to contract for and operate the CPU. Details would have to be worked out with owners of any interested businesses.

Public Input

Dorothy Bates, chair of the Greenbelt Consumer Cooperative board of directors, attended the meeting with several other board members. Bates said the Co-op board considers the retail post office "connected to the health" of Roosevelt Center and wishes to see it remain there. The board thinks all merchants will feel an impact if the post office moves, she continued, and considers it the "ethos of the city" to have services in the city center. The Co-op could not afford to do the remodeling required for a CPU. However, she said, it was her understanding that the postal service would not fund it either. Mayor Judith Davis told her the USPS would have to discuss the specifics of any agreement with the business hosting

Museum Opens New Show; Talk on Women's Sports

by Katie Scott-Childress and Jill St. John

The Greenbelt Museum opens a new exhibit on Friday, May 21 titled "Living the Healthy Life: Sports, Health and Fitness During the New Deal Era." The exhibit explores the extraordinary changes in fitness and body image that occurred in the 1930s and 1940s. These changes stemmed from government intervention in public health, the emergence of talented black and female athletes, fitness celebrities such as Jack La Laine, weight charts and penny scales.

Beginning in the 1930s especially, Americans became preoccupied with their weight with the rise of the penny scale and prescriptive charts announcing "What You Should Weigh." Weight charts led women, previously concerned mostly with their figures' proportions, to consider weight as a major beauty factor. The museum exhibit includes a restored penny scale where visitors will learn their "weight and fate," as one dial offers a correct weight and another reveals one's fortune.

The federal government became involved with Americans' fitness and health during the New Deal era through legislation and nutritional guidance. Ineffective and dangerous patent medicines became a thing of the past in 1938 with passage of the landmark Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. This Act for the first time required drug makers to prove their drug's safety before it could be sold to an unwary public. In 1941 the government published nutritional guidelines for a "Recommended Daily Allowance" and promoted portions based on a "basic seven" food grouping. The U.S.D.A.'s nutritional guidelines also carried a moral imperative for women, who were charged with feeding their families healthfully.

The rise of professional athletes such as Babe Ruth, Jackie Robinson and Babe Didrikson allowed youngsters from both sides of the color and gender line to aspire to athletic fame. And fitness gurus such as Jack La Laine and Charles Atlas transformed the previously grotesque image of the body builder to a norm all could aspire to.

Health in Greenbelt

Government social scientists thoroughly planned for the health and fitness needs of Greenbelt's residents. Greenbelt's team of well-known planners ensured that the residents of this utopian town would be healthy by providing amenities previously only known to the rich. The physical layout of Greenbelt gave adults and chil-

Letters to the Editor

Define Cooperative

Open Letter to GHI:

I was inspected by the beautification rep yesterday. To those who know me in Greenbelt they know that there are few people in Greenbelt who work harder in their yard than I do. Instead of recognizing a supreme effort in my yard – take the time to look and see – the card indicates a few minute deficiencies, which of course I'll correct, but no mention of my six weeks of work.

Someone needs to look up the meaning of "cooperative." If the aim of the program is to alienate those who work hard in their yard, it is succeeding with flying colors.

To me the approach to the program and the goals should be reconsidered. Always recognize effort. Whoever is implementing the program needs a course in public relations.

Kudos to News Review

I just wanted to thank the person(s) who have/has been doing the ad for P&G's Old Greenbelt Theatre.

From the "Passion of the Christ" ad that changed twice before publication through our latest ads for two films per week with a mixing of the times and the free first Saturday shows thrown in, you all have been letter perfect each and every time.

So thank you very much for your faultless service for the past several months.

Around the Traffic Circle Issue Again

Hanover Parkway is the main thoroughfare between Greenbelt and Good Luck roads. This means that vehicles have the right of way on Hanover Parkway, not cars on the side streets. There is only one way in and one way out of their apartment complexes and that is the side streets connecting to Hanover Parkway.

Those cars don't have a prayer of being able to turn left or right until the constant flow of traffic on Hanover Parkway stops. The circles provide the side street vehicles the opportunity to make their respective turns in a timely manner so that they too can get to their destinations. This is the reason why speed bumps would not have been the answer to help all traffic going in all directions to flow smoothly.

I agree with the author of the letter about "No More Traffic Circles" in that "50 percent of the cars approaching the circle do not understand the right-of-way rules associated with the circle." Why do they not understand? There is a yellow sign before you get to the circle that shows a circle ahead, another red and white sign that says "yield" and a white sign below the red one that says "to traffic in circle." If people do not know how to read signs, why are they driving other than to cause accidents?

This is probably why there are police cars by Schrom Park to watch for people who are not following the signs.

SHA Announces Beltway Repaving

The Maryland Department of Transportation's State Highway Administration (SHA) is beginning a $9 million project to resurface a 3½ mile portion of I-95/I-495 (the Capital Beltway) between MD 295 (B-W Parkway) and US 50 (John Hanson Highway) in Prince George's County. This is another step in a series of improvements designed to provide a smoother road surface following years of harsh winter weather. Weather permitting, the project will be completed by fall 2004.

This project includes the ramps to westbound US 50 and the New Carrollton train station (Exit 19B) located at the US 50 Interchange and the replacement of the concrete barrier wall that separates northbound and southbound I-95/I-495.

During resurfacing, single lane closures along I-95/I-495 will occur between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. and 5 a.m., Monday through Friday. Nighttime double lane closures may occur between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m., Sunday through Thursday. Variable Message Signs (VMS), arrow panels, drums and concrete barriers will guide motorists through the work zone. Motorists should expect major delays and seek alternate routes.

SHA awarded the contract to Francis O. Day Company of Rockville. SHA and the contractor remind all drivers to plan for extra travel time and use caution while driving through highway work zones.

Citizens who have questions about traffic operations on I-95/I-495, US 50 or other state numbered routes in Prince George's County may call SHA's District Office 3 at 301-513-7300 or toll free at 1-800-749-0737.

The 50/50 winners were Bill Souser and Harold Miller.

See you at the meetings on Wednesdays at 11 a.m. in the multi-purpose room at the Community Center.

Local Luthier, Bob Shade, Is Featured in "Vintage Guitar"

by Eileen Peterson

It takes three to four weeks for local luthier (guitar builder) Bob Shade to turn a piece of basswood, bought at a lumber yard, into a Hallmark guitar.

With a band saw and a spoke shaver, Shade creates an instrument of beauty and quality sound with his own custom-designed tailpiece and pickups. He sells under a name which, in the 1960s, became best known for its swept-wing design. Shade now owns the rights to the name and designs.

"Hallmark guitars were played by such well-known groups as the 'Mamas and the Papas,' 'The Doors,' 'The Association' and 'Jefferson Airplane,'" says Shade.

Besides basswood (which he likes because it is light and resonates well), Shade works with maple, rosewood, mahogany, swamp ash and ebony in his Greenbelt workshop.

Media Attention

Shade is featured in an extensive article in the June 2004 issue of "Vintage Guitar Magazine." It chronicles the historic Hallmark line and Shade's mastering of the guitar-building techniques at a high level.

"A master luthier," Bill Gruggett, an associate of Hallmark founder Joe Hall, says of Shade, with whom he now works.

Shade works with two designs: Swept Wing and Stradette. So far Shade has built guitars for long-time friend Marty Friedman, for years lead guitarist for the band "Megadeth," and for Buddy Dughi and wife of "Hot Rod Trio" and for Deke Dickerson. The legendary rockabilly revivalist ordered a double-neck Swept Wing six-string bass and six-string guitar, in gold sparkle. Then he asked for his name inlaid on a fingerboard that lights up. "I pulled it off and he got it just in time for the NAMM show (National Association of Musical Manufacturers) which is the largest guitar event each year," Shade said.

He has a production line of Hallmark guitars and has sold a bass and guitar to C.J. Ramone (of "The Ramones" fame) for his coming South American tour with the band "Bad Chopper."

Boy Boorer of England will play one of Shade's guitars on the "Craig Kilborn Show" daily next week. He has also sold to

Local Show

From June 2 to 9, Shade will be in Towson for a World Guitar Congress featuring custom and production models of guitars on exhibit, as well as clinics and live performances by such musicians as Friedman, Dick Dale and Eric Johnson and many others. Les Paul is chairman of the event, which is free and open to the public. For information visit www.towson.edu/worldmusiccongress.

Always Music

A musician since childhood, Shade finally chose the drums at age 11 and was playing, while in middle-school, with a rock band of high-school graduates. He played, after 1982, in a band called "Darius" (with Ed Day, a recent Greenbelter) and in a band called "Hawaii" that played Hammerjacks in Baltimore and opened for the band "ELP" at the Capital Centre in Landover.

After a brief stay in California, the Hyattsville native moved to Greenbelt and opened Greenbelt Video store in Roosevelt Center in 1992, which he sold in 2002. He married College Park-born Mimi. Their daughters are Savannah, 10, and Miranda, who will be 6 in August.

GREENBELT NEWS REVIEW

Ottlie's 100th Celebrated in Fla.

Ottlie Van Allen, former Greenbelt "Outstanding Citizen," celebrated her 100th birthday with members of her Maryland church there to celebrate with her. Some of them made the trip to Florida where Ottlie lives in a nursing home; two had recently moved to Florida. Greenbelters who made the trip were Mary Carson, Marjory Donn and Marge Owens. About a dozen Maryland friends were there. The youngest was little Ottlie Tyler who came with her parents.

Before the celebration friends bought meal tickets and took turns sharing a meal with Ottlie.

When the big day came Ottlie's daughter-in-law Norma Van Allen arranged a program that included singing by folks from the nearby American Legion. If Ottlie could not hear all the warm wishes given to her, she was aware that her friends were there. Her friends said she looked "wonderful."

The program ended with her Paint Branch friends singing "Spirit of Life" – the song that Paint Branchers sing at the end of their service – a fitting end to a happy few days.

At the video store, he had a guitar repair/restoration shop. Five years ago, he apprenticed himself to then 79-year-old Bill Loveless at his Savage Mill workshop. "But I really wanted to build my own guitars," he explains. To contact him log on to www.hallmarkguitars.com

Nursing Home Mold Stops Acquisition

by Elaine Skolnik

The Little Sisters of the Holy Family are no longer interested in acquiring the vacant Greenbelt Nursing and Rehabilitation Center building off Greenbelt Road. According to Russell Shipley, an attorney representing the group, an inspection of the facility revealed excessive amounts of mold in the building interior. This was the key factor for the Little Sisters' decision not to proceed with their plans to buy the four-plus acre property.

In a September 25, 2003 memo from Greenbelt's Planning and Community Development Director Celia Craze to City Manager Michael McLaughlin, Craze had noted that at the time the Little Sisters operated several centers in the Washington area "which have been sold and operations [will be] consolidated in the Greenbelt Center."

Affiliated with the Catholic Archdiocese of Washington, the Little Sisters planned to renovate the entire center. According to Craze, "They would operate a congregate living/nursing facility and rehabilitation."

The Little Sisters' plan for the vacant facility was compatible with the desires of the then city council, as Craze reported "that this building [would be] returned to use as a housing/nursing/rehabilitation facility."

Developer Interests

Shipley told the News Review that several developers have shown some interest in the property, which is zoned R-18 medium density apartment (18-20 units an acre). However, rental or condominium apartments appear to be on their drawing boards, not a nursing and rehabilitation center. Apartment use would no doubt require the demolition of the existing facility.

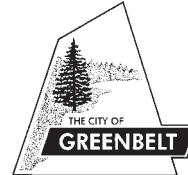

In the event a developer comes forward with plans for a nursing or rehabilitation center, a special exception for this use would again be required since the special exception for the closed facility expired after 120 days of non-use as a nursing center.

History

The Greenbelt Nursing and Rehabilitation Center has been closed since December 21, 1998, following a cut off of Medicare and Medicaid funding by federal and state regulators. This action followed charges of numerous quality-care violations at the center, leading to almost a year of inspections by the state, surveys, a consent agreement and litigation.

The center was operated by Northern Health Facilities, Inc., a subsidiary of Extendicare Health Services of Milwaukee. Some believed at the time that the federal government acted too hastily in ordering the facility closed and should have allowed the federally-appointed manager more time to correct problems identified in earlier surveys. However, when the owners went to U.S. District Court in Greenbelt to request a temporary restraining order on the federal order to close, the request was denied.

Eighty-two nursing home patients were then relocated to other facilities in the area.

contended, remained unresolved. Staff proposed removing the camera now and installing a new, more sophisticated camera at a later date at another intersection based upon traffic studies showing that a camera would be useful in catching violators. At the same time the camera housing could be left in place so that motorists might think a camera was still in use. If determined feasible, a new camera might then be installed at a later date. This proposal would have saved the city $20,000 in the next fiscal year.

The two new members, in light of city budget constraints, agreed to staff's proposal. Councilmember Edward Putens sided with Roberts to keep the camera in position until such time as a better site could be found, noting that the cameras had not been installed for the purpose of raising revenues. Davis, who claimed to be the swing vote on red light cameras, wound up once again siding with Putens and Roberts. As a result, budget expenditures were increased $20,000.

Personnel

Recognizing that city forces were increasingly being asked by council to take on new tasks, council agreed to add or strengthen several positions. In the Department of Planning and Community Development, a half-time office associate position was increased to a full-time job. Council also agreed to add a fourth inspector in Code Enforcement, this one to have a broad range of duties including enforcement of skateboarding regulations and animal control on weekends.

In the Police Department, council added another officer to work primarily in Springhill Lake. Previously, AIMCO, owners of the apartment complex, had agreed to pay half the cost of an added officer. The city had hoped to get a grant for its half of the cost but that idea fell through. The budget was increased by $80,000 for the new officer and equipment with the expectation that AIMCO would reimburse the city for half the costs.

Greenbelt CARES received funding for an additional part-time crisis intervention counselor. Recreation was granted another full-time recreation coordinator to provide strengthened supervision of facilities on the weekend. The added cost of $42,000 was partially offset by a reduction of $7,000 for part-time staffing. Council decided on the lower priced coordinator instead of the staff-preferred facilities supervisor.

Public Works received no added personnel. However, to help out the existing crews added funds were provided for contractual work to maintain city facilities, perform landscaping work in subdivisions and remove trees.

Other Groups

GATE (Greenbelt Access Television) received an increased contribution of $5,000 over that proposed in the budget. This was less than the $8,700 GATE requested. Council could still change its mind and add the $3,700 before final budget adoption. A grant of $13,000 was given to the ACE Reading Club to fund a part-time volunteer coordinator position.

Unsurprisingly, the amount of contributions requested by volunteer groups performing activities beneficial to the city was fully funded, increasing that budget by $3,300. Council also provided $10,000 as a contribution to the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum as a partial effort to help that group meet its challenge grant in the hope that the moneys needed could be fully realized by the fund drive underway.

Because staff realized that it had underestimated electricity costs now that caps on rates were being removed, council added $37,000 to the budget. Also added was $600 as a contribution to Council of Governments (COG) for a housing assistance program.

Other residents and business owners from Old Greenbelt also spoke in favor of retaining the retail post office where it is, citing the "walk-ability" of Greenbelt as one of the city's main attractions, the historical significance of having the post office in the city center, the fact that a CPU would not offer full services and the importance of the post office to the vitality of Roosevelt Center.

Some expressed concerns over the permanence of a CPU, given that it would be tied to the prosperity and business decisions of the business owner who contracted for it. Others were concerned about the accessibility to the new facility for people in the city center since not all services would be available at the CPU. Davis pointed out that the CPU would still be "walk-able" and that The Bus route includes the Greenbelt East location.

Sheldon Goldberg, resident of Windsor Green and member of the Greenbelt East Advisory Committee (GEAC), was present in the audience. He spoke in favor of the option recommended by city staff.

$10,000 was added to provide lighting for the Greenbelt Community Center stage. City annual contributions to reserves for equipment replacement and building repair were each increased $25,000.

The council spent considerable time deciding how much to increase inspection fees for rental property. Planning and Community Development Director Celia Craze recommended increasing the fees by $30 per unit for rental apartment complexes and $60 for individual residences rented out by their owners. This would bring city fees in accord with those in other communities, Craze said. McLaughlin felt that the fee increases should be phased in over a period of time.

Inspection Fees

Council went back and forth on the issue of inspection fees before deciding to increase the apartment fees by $20 and individual unit fees by $35. Davis expressed concern that the increased costs would be passed through to the renters.

A proposal to install planters in Roosevelt Center in order to provide for blooming flowers was supported by Putens. However, when Craze and others raised concern about the impact of such structures on the design plans developed by Landscape Architect Sharon Bradley-Papp with considerable community input, Putens withdrew his support.

Pizza

In the middle of the work-session council took a break to fill up on pizza, soda, brownies, cookies and dips. Davis invited city staff and citizens in attendance to the feast, as well as the television audience. However, no at-home viewers were observed running in the door to accept the mayor's invitation.

After the last decision was reached by council, Davis expressed her expectation that later this year the city would find that there was a silver lining for its fiscal concerns instead of the current lead lining. She thanked the staff for its efforts and said, "We are putting our necks out on the line, but staff gave us good information and justification for the needs."

He pointed out that the move would free up a number of parking spaces now occupied by postal trucks in the rear of the Center.

Limited Choices

After hearing some of the ideas against moving the retail post office from the Center, Councilmember Edward Putens reminded all those assembled that this is not a new issue and that the USPS has been talking to city officials for years about the need for expansion and increased security for its trucks. He remembered that USPS officials were considering closing the Greenbelt Post Office altogether and relocating its services to Glenn Dale.

Putens expressed appreciation to Congressman Steny Hoyer and others who made sure funds were budgeted for the new facility and said city councilmembers, past and present, had worked hard to find a suitable site in order to keep the post office within the city limits. While there was talk of two operations in Greenbelt, there were no promises made, Putens said.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts said he is confident he will still be able to get postal services at the Center and he thinks a CPU will offer a business a chance to be re-invigorated. People who come into a store for postal business will have an opportunity to look around for other purchases. The business will also receive some revenue from postal sales. While the Co-op is not interested, there have been inquiries from at least one other Center business owner. He made the motion to go with staff recommendations.

Construction on the new facility could begin within three months and be completed by next summer, about the time the lease on the current post office building expires.

Fitness Center Fees

In another agenda item, Putens introduced for first reading a resolution to increase by 50 cents daily admission fees at the Aquatic and Fitness Center. According to written remarks by staff, this change will raise approximately $20,000 in additional revenue. If adopted after its second reading, the resolution would go into effect with the opening of the season on May 29.

Woodland Conservation

In response to a request by Greenbelt City Council, Prince George's County Councilmember Douglas Peters had sent his proposed legislation on the Woodland Conservation Policy Document to council for comment. Currently developers are requested, but not mandated, to preserve trees on-site rather than to mitigate woodlands off site. Developers now are also not required to submit evidence that more strict forms of conservation cannot be accomplished before making use of less desirable methods, from an environmental point of view. The city was seeking to make the county's woodland conservation policy stricter and more binding on developers.

The proposed legislation submitted by Peters clarifies what activities are permitted in woodland conservation areas with specifics on tree removals on property that has already been developed.

Putens made a motion, which carried unanimously, to respond to Peters with city support for the intent of the draft bill but also clarifying that the bill as written would not accomplish a particular goal of the city. This goal would make developers more accountable for more closely following the procedure outlined in the county woodland conservation policy before permitting them to use less stringent methods of tree or woodland conservation. Roberts provided a second to Puten's motion but said he did not think the current proposal improved anything.

Legislative Initiatives

Council also discussed items to submit to the Maryland Municipal League (MML) in response to MML's annual request for statewide legislative initiatives. Assistant to the City Manager David Moran was present and encouraged council to submit only its top two issues to MML for consideration. By limiting submissions to two, Moran thought there would be a better chance of their being selected by MML's Legislative Committee.

Council agreed to submit municipal electricity aggregation as one of the issues, since rate caps for electricity expire this summer and increases of up to 16 percent are expected.

If staff determines after consulting with MML staff and others that statewide legislation is the appropriate remedy, the other issue will be addressing the problem of increasing premiums for Worker's Compensation from the Injured Workers Insurance Fund. Rate increases appear by city staff to be unrelated to the amount of claims by the city.

Putens' motion to submit these two items received unanimous support from council.

Legislative Update

Earlier in the evening council heard an update from members of the 22nd Legislative delegation. Senator Paul Pinsky, Delegates Justin Ross, Anne Healey and Tawanna Gaines and County Councilmember Douglas Peters were present to participate in the Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) 10th Annual Student Awards. The delegation stayed after the awards program to address council.

Senator Pinsky outlined the highlights of the last state legislative session. He said the budget, and slot machines had dominated the session. He had read a glowing report recently on the fiscal condition of Maryland in the Washington Post but had not seen numbers that would justify those assessments. Spending will continue to overcome revenue in the future, he said.

Pinsky does not consider slot machines good public policy and is not in favor of legalizing them, but he said they are "still knocking on the door." Even if slots were approved, he said, it would be several years before their effect were felt. His proposed legislation would close tax loop-holes currently exploited by corporations as an alternative means of generating revenue but acknowledged that the governor has another view.

Pinsky said he also hoped increases in the transportation trust fund would go towards more mass transportation but admitted that Governor Ehrlich wants to put more support toward roads, including the ICC.

The mandate for Thornton bill funding will mean less money for local governments. All members of the delegation, as well as Greenbelt City councilmembers agreed that the coming year would "be tough."

dren ample green space with walking paths, over a dozen playgrounds, one of Maryland's first public swimming pools and centrally located tennis courts, ball fields, a man-made lake with row boats and a gymnasium. The town hired three full-time recreation staff to organize activities for the early residents.

The exhibit features three-dimensional artifacts from the museum's collection, such as sports and exercise equipment, patent medicines, pamphlets, cookbooks, advertising and other ephemera of the period using "scientific" evidence to promote ideal body weights, concepts of nutrition and methods of gaining physical fitness.

On display will be two home beauty regimens will be on display that guided women through weeks of beautifying fitness rituals to cure bodily defects. The development of sportswear is shown through uniforms, bathing suits, photographs and a hands-on primer on sportswear fabrics of the period.

This exhibit replaces the earlier show called "Izzy!" featuring the cartoons of Isadore Parker. It closed on May 3.

Related Lecture

In conjunction with this exhibit the museum is sponsoring a free lecture and slideshow titled "Women in Sports: Play Day to Elite Competition, 1923-1953." The program will take place on Tuesday, May 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Greenbelt Community Center, Multi-Purpose Room 201.

City Manager Roy Braden presenting glove to Bob Sommers, bat boy for the Greenbelt Shamrocks baseball team, 1940.

In this lecture and slideshow Dr. Joan Hult, professor emerita, University of Maryland, will show how the three decades from 1923-1953 were pivotal for women's sports in America. Women shed their corsets and began to participate in both competitive and recreational sports.

The Great Depression years of the 1930s brought new opportunities for women in sports through New Deal programs that spread recreation activities to communities across the nation. Women and girls began to participate in sports such as bowling, basketball, softball, volleyball, tennis and swimming.

During World War II, "Rosie the Riveter" emerged as a symbol of a strong, capable worker in the industrial labor market, who had to play the role of both mother and father. By the end of the war women had a new sense of self-confidence in their physical fitness unknown to previous generations.

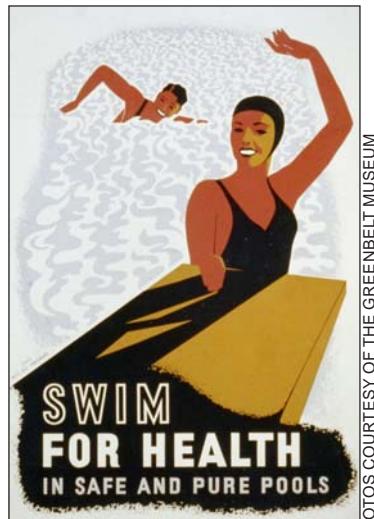

After the war, as men returned to their jobs and women were supposed to return to the home, women fought a cultural battle to stay on the ball field and keep sports and recreation a part of their lives.

Hult is a sports historian who has written and spoken extensively, both nationally and internationally, on the history of American women in sports and athletics. Her most recent book is called "A Century of Women's Basketball: From Frailty to Final Four."

She is currently completing "The Legacy of Women's Collegiate Athletics: Struggle for Equality, 1950-80." She has served as a consultant for HBO shows and ESPN films on the history of women in sports.

The Greenbelt Museum sponsors a bi-monthly lecture series that is free to the public. The lectures explore aspects of the history of the Great Depression and World War II era.

Cell Phones Needed by Aid Coalition

Secure the Call, a nonprofit, all volunteer organization that distributes free emergency 911-only cell phones, needs help. The organization is a local coalition of over 50 organizations including police and sheriff's departments, domestic violence departments, senior citizen groups, school crossing guards, school bus drivers and any other group that demonstrates a need for emergency 911-only cell phones. Phones are collected, wiped clean of any service numbers and address books and then reprogrammed for 911-only service. They are given back to coalition partners who distribute them free to the community.

Currently there is a scarcity of phones to meet the demand. People are asked to consider setting up a program to collect phones within their community or organization, church, synagogue or apartment building.

Police Budget Up Slightly with No New Staff

Telling Greenbelt City Council that "It's hard to tell where you're going unless you know where you've been," Greenbelt Police Chief James Craze introduced his department's now obligatory Power Point® presentation for the fiscal year 2005 budget to the council. A show of old time departmental photos accompanied by music of the times ensued followed by a review of departmental activities for 2003, programs underway and objectives to be accomplished.

Craze was pleased to report a significant decrease in the number of crimes against persons over previous years (down 23.4 percent) even though these crimes had increased slightly for the county. While arrests were also down 10 percent, they were comparable to the recent historic average. Crime clearance rates were 14 percent, compared to 9 percent for the county. While vehicular accidents had increased slightly, the number of personal injuries had declined, although there were three fatalities.

Budget

The total proposed police budget is $7,387,600, more than a third of the entire general fund city budget. It is only slightly increased from the previous year and no new personnel were proposed. Last year an additional officer was added by the council on the basis that half of the cost of the officer would be paid for from a grant obtained by the city and the other half by the owners of Springhill Lake. The officer would be assigned to that area of the city. However, the grant was not obtainable and the added officer was not employed. City Manager Michael McLaughlin did not propose the position in this year's budget, although AIMCO, the owners of Springhill Lake appear to be still willing to fund half the cost.

Without that position the department's authorized strength of sworn officers will be 53. There are also 15 other personnel, mostly communication specialists (police dispatchers) assigned to the department.

Laptop Computers

Of greatest concern to the council was the problem in getting purchased laptop computers to be used in the squad cars operational. The Greenbelt Fraternal Order of Police (FOP) raised this concern at its meeting of May 3 with the council, noting that the computers were purchased 19 months ago and were still not in use, thereby endangering officer safety. Craze noted that a staff report requested by the council was being prepared and would be submitted shortly. (The report was provided to council on May 13.)

Craze at the meeting and in the subsequent report outlined a long list of problems that prevented implementation. It seems that technology has been advancing more rapidly than the city was able to keep up with, causing the city to modify its hardware and software on several occasions in order to gain access to the state's data base. Craze, while not faulting the city's new information technology (IT) person, said that a part of the problem was the need to have an IT person in the department knowledgeable with police procedures and needs and who did not also have to deal with all the other technical problems of the city. However, he did not recommend one at this time given the city's budget constraints. Instead, he said that with the departmental strength now being close to full due to the filling of vacancies, it would be possible for him to assign an officer to work with the city's IT director in finally resolving the problem. Craze told council that progress was being made "even though it doesn't show."

At the FOP meeting council members had asked why they had not been made aware of this problem impacting officer safety. McLaughlin told the council that the question of officer safety was never brought to his attention and, although slow, he was told that progress was being made. There was not an issue to be brought before the council.

Craze said that everything the police command does is in the interest of officer safety. However, he did agree that it may be possible to seek and obtain information more quickly on the computer than radioing through a police dispatcher. In his subsequent report to council, Craze called the claim of an officer safety issue as "unfair" and "inflammatory." "The statement imparts a callous and uncaring attitude that is not indicative of the people involved," he said.

Councilmember Edward Putens told the chief that he should just proceed to assign a police officer to help finish the job and not come to council for approval. Councilmember Rodney Roberts, however, said that he felt the chief should come to council if he was to reassign a patrol officer, as he didn't want to see any officer taken off the street. Craze assured him that he would maintain a full complement of patrol officers.

In his later report Craze noted that committing an officer full-time to IT duty and giving this highest priority may not solve the problem "so long as we are subject to unknown problems and challenges beyond our control" which may cause the project to suffer delays.

Craze also noted that council would need to approve purchases of newer protocols at a cost of $10,000 to $15,000 for the laptops to communicate with the wireless system as the ones now on hand will no longer be supported by Verizon Wireless. Also, it will need to approve the purchase of license rights to gain access to the Prince George's County Sheriffs' Department warrant system at an estimated cost of $15,000.

Red Light Cameras

The second contentious issue in the budget review was the elimination of a red light camera that is not paying for its costs in the amount of fines received from violators. Staff, for the third time, has proposed its elimination. This time staff also proposed installing another, more sophisticated camera at a new location following a study to determine where such an installation would be feasible. McLaughlin suggested using one to monitor left turn violations from Greenbelt Road eastbound to Hanover Parkway northbound where complaints of left turns being made from a through lane have been noted. Removing the current camera now and replacing it with one later that will pay its own way would provide a $20,000 savings.

Roberts expressed his dismay with the way the camera program is going declaring that the council should just do away with it. "It's pretty petty to balance a budget this large with a red light camera," he said. He expressed fear that the state would conclude that this program is a revenue program instead of a safety program and force the city to discontinue it. He proposed that this camera not be removed until a new location was decided upon.

A problem with the current cameras is that they fail to detect violators that creep through an intersection, as can be the case when traffic is jammed up. This is given as the reason why staff observations of violations have not materialized in the one camera finding violators. Also, the cameras are not sufficiently sophisticated to recognize some turning movement violations as can be done with newer ones.

Captains

The last significant issue discussed, which did not have any impact on the budget, was the chief's recommendation that the positions of lieutenant be retitled as captains without a change in pay. Calling the position of lieutenant in a police department passé, Craze said that in a department Greenbelt's size the positions second in rank to the chief should be called either captain or colonel.

While agreeing to the change in titles, McLaughlin, proposed that the position of lieutenant be retained at a lower grade for the promotion of officers who replace the three current lieutenants who are to become captains when they leave the department. After a three-year trial in that grade new lieutenants could then be promoted to the position of captain. This proposal has not set well with the FOP whose members would prefer to be directly promoted from sergeant to captain without a trial period. Not being a budgetary issue, this will be resolved when the council considers a reclassification proposal to be submitted by the city manager.

County Work Hours Change, Leaving a Firefighter Gap

by James Giese

At a budget worksession at which Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Chief Brian Rudy and Assistant Chief Chris Fleshman expressed satisfaction with the amount budgeted by the city for equipment replacement, Rudy advised the council of a recent decision to change work shifts for county-paid firefighters who work in volunteer stations daytime from four 10-hour days a week to five 8-hour days. For Greenbelt this means there will be no paid firefighters on duty from 3 to 5 p.m., effective May 17.

Rudy said it would be very difficult for volunteers, who work daytime paid jobs, to cover this time period. City councilmembers expressed concern, noting that this was rush hour, a time when a lot of accidents occur requiring ambulances and equipment.

Rudy had expressed his concerns to the county. The best answer he could get was from Battalion Chief Victor Ferreira, who advised him to keep records of calls during those hours for which the volunteers could not respond. If those figures demonstrated a problem, the county could reconsider. Rudy asked the city council for its help.

Last year the county considered removing all paid fire-fighters from the Greenbelt station. With the aid of the city council and County Council-member Douglas Peters this was not carried out. However, Rudy told council that Branchville, which is a first-run responder to part of Greenbelt, lost its paid firefighters and is now all-volunteer. Berwyn Heights, another department responding to Greenbelt calls, will also lose paid firefighters from 3 to 5 p.m. While much concerned, Rudy expressed hope that the neighboring departments could respond to ambulance calls if Greenbelt was unable to do so, or, if not, that West Lanham Hills could fill in. Fleshman told council that the county was understaffed and that about one-third of the 900 firefighters authorized are unavailable for duty because of vacancies, injuries or other reasons.

Council agreed to City Manager Michael McLaughlin's recommendation to send a letter of severe concern to the county and to Peters. Councilmember Edward Putens also proposed that council consider the matter again around the first week of June.

Budget

Based upon adopted past council policy, the yield of a one-cent tax levy is allocated to the Greenbelt volunteer department for equipment purchases. The budget for fiscal year 2005 now under council review is for $55,000. The money allocated is not necessarily spent every year but accumulated until funds are sufficient to replace an item of major equipment.

The next purchase is to occur in 2005 to replace a 1995 Quality pumper truck. Because this truck has a good trade-in value, Rudy told council that sufficient funds should be on hand. A county-owned ambulance is to be replaced in 2007 with one to be owned by the department. Another fire truck is to be replaced in 2009.

The volunteer department, which is not a part of the city government, receives most of its funding from Prince George's County with additional funds raised during fund drives. However, it is housed in a city building on Crescent Road and receives city assistance in purchasing equipment.

Other fire companies also respond to emergencies in Greenbelt. Sometimes they are closer to a Greenbelt fire or accident scene than is the Greenbelt company. Likewise, Greenbelt responds to calls outside the city. Other departments that may respond in Greenbelt on a first-run basis are Branchville, Berwyn Heights and West Lanham Hills. Beltsville, College Park, Riverdale Park and Glenn Dale may also respond when needed.
