Despite Snow and Wind, Ground Sweetheart Beverly Palau Is Honored by Democrats Is Broken for New Post Office

by Virginia Beauchamp

"It'll be a snowy day in Greenbelt before we get this project done!" That was Congressman Steny Hoyer laughing at the ground-breaking ceremony on Monday, February 28 for the new Greenbelt post office. He was summing up how it had felt through the many years to reach this day.

Hoyer was referring to the lengthy saga as planning for the facility, acquisition of the land and then its threatened sale (and abandonment of the project) followed, one episode after the other, before the project was finally reinstated. Through it all, Hoyer had shepherded it on its labyrinthine way.

But on this day he was also joking about the actual weather impinging on the ceremony for which he had just arrived. The real question on this day had been whether the long-awaited event would actually be held. The projected massive snowstorm, beginning around 10 a.m., had left a thick blanket by early afternoon and schools everywhere in the region were closed. The event, on the cleared tract off Ora Glen Drive near Hanover Councilmembers Konrad Herling, Rodney Roberts, Edward Putens, Congressman Steny Hoyer, Mayor Judith Davis and Timothy Haney, a post office official, were on hand for the ceremonial groundbreaking.

Parkway, had been scheduled to take place at 3:30 p.m. that afternoon.

Motto

But as Mayor Judith Davis later reminded a gathering crowd, this was the postal service, whose motto keeps the mails moving despite rain or snow or winter storms.

A canvas roof had been stretched on the cleared tract not far from the curb on Ora Glen. A carpet covered the mud beneath the canvas and a pathway of small stones marked the way to

by James Giese

After a major step backward in its efforts to develop Greenbelt Station by a court reversal of approvals for the conceptual site plan and preliminary plan of subdivision, Greenbelt Metropark, L.L.C, project developer, hopes to take two steps forward in the next two weeks. On March 9, the developer has scheduled an interactive design review (see ad on page 6) open to the public to hear comments about its plans for developing the south core of Greenbelt Station. The south core is the former A.H. Smith sand and gravel operations land located on the east side of the CSX Railroad tracks between Greenbelt Road and the Greenbelt Metro Station property (the north core) and west of the Beltway Plaza shopping mall. The Prince George's County Planning Board has placed on its

March 17 agenda the develop-er's request to reconsider its approval of the conceptual site plan and preliminary plan of subdivision to rectify the error that caused the courts to reverse the approvals. Design Review

Beverly Palau

Beverly Palau was honored this year by the Eleanor and Franklin Roosevelt Democratic Club as a Valentine Sweetheart. Traditionally the club has honored one or more city employees each year by designating them Sweethearts for the work they do for the city. While the club is a political organization, the city employees are selected on a nonpartisan basis.

After being introduced to the club by City Councilmember Leta Mach and making brief remarks, Palau received from club President William Hunt a heartshaped box of candy at the club's February 18 meeting.

"Catch the Sun" Is March Artful Afternoon Theme

Stained glass, ceramics, an opportunity to make a sun catcher and a free concert are featured at the March Artful Afternoon program to be held Sunday, March 6 from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Community Center.

Art Workshops

Artist-in-residence Betty Broderick will lead a free "sun catcher" workshop for participants age 16 and over, from 1 to 3 They can get ready to p.m. catch some sun by participating in this stained-glass project, an introduction to stained glass for people who have never tried it. Interested people should arrive promptly for this popular project, as participation is limited. Materials will be provided.

An opportunity will be available as well to work on a ceramic mural with tile-making instructor and Artist-in-residence Katie Scott-Childress from 1 to 3 p.m. The theme for the mural is "Nature in All Its Gloriousness." Participants will sketch a design they will then carve into a clay tile. The finished mural will be hung in a public place. No experience is necessary. This project is recommended for ages 5 and over. Materials will be provided. Those who enjoy these art projects will discover their interest in time to register for a spring stained glass or tile-making class at the Community Center. (Registration began February 28 for Greenbelt residents and will open March 7 to nonresidents. See www.ci.greenbelt.md.us/ Recreation_Brochure.pdf for more information).

served in that capacity for the past 16 years. As such she is responsible informing for Greenbelt citizens about what services the city provides for them.

Palau is best known for her responsibilities in operation of the city cable channel, channel 71.

"I am the government access part of it," she told the group. (The channel is also used for programming by GATE, Greenbelt Access Television, Inc., a citizens organization that also produces cable programming.)

Palau is often seen at council meetings and other city events working behind one of the video cameras or in the control studio. She has two student interns provide a free performance.

The Community Center Gallery features an exhibit of Alyssa Dennis drawings. Her haunting, large-scale compositions include shadowy figures superimposed on built environments, seemingly distant, as if existing only in memory. The show will continue through April 16. The gallery is open daily from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. except when the space is reserved.

Artful Afternoon attendees can visit the third floor working studios of Greenbelt's artists-in-residence from 1 to 5 p.m. This is also a good time for artists to view the studios, as applications are now available for artist-in-residence studio space. Call Nicole DeWald at 240-542-2057 for in-the Greenbelt Community Center. According to Sandi Gallagher project manager for Metropark, architects, landscape architects and planners will be in attendance to review plans for the development of the southern area of Greenbelt Station which is planned to be developed primarily for residential use with some neighborhood shopping facilities included. The developers claim the plans have innovative architecture, transit-oriented site layouts and elaborate

How quickly Greenbelt Metropark can proceed with the implementation of these plans will be dependent on the response of the Prince George's Planning Board to the request for reconsideration of the prior approvals for Greenbelt Station's conceptual site plan and preliminary plan of subdivision. Both the Planning Board and Prince George's County Council had approved these plans. However, the City of Greenbelt successfully appealed these decisions to the Maryland courts and was handed the verdict it sought from the Maryland Court of Appeals - a reversal of the approvals. photographs will be on display at the New Deal Café in Roosevelt Center during the month of March. The reception will also feature traditional Irish music by Ceolbhuin, a trio from Baltimore.

"Greenbelt Personalities" consists of candid portraits of children and adults who live in or near Greenbelt. "People's personalities can appear in their faces through a look that shows who they are. In my photographs I try to capture that look," says Gardner. "The identity of a city comes from its people and Greenbelt's personality is revealed through the personalities of Greenbelt."

The show contains 36 pictures. All were taken in 2004 at activities including the Labor Day Festival and Parade, the Pink Ribbon Ride and the Tree Lighting ceremony. Subjects range from newborn baby Rebecca to luminaries like Mayor Judith Davis, the 2004 Outstanding Citizen Patti Brothers and Greenbelt Elementary School PTA President Dameon Levi.

Gardner's work has appeared in the Greenbelt News Review and at the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Photo Show. This is his first solo show.

For more information call 301-474-5642. Monthly art exhibits at the New Deal Café are sponsored by the Friends of New Deal Café Arts with a supporting grant from Prince George's County.

These eyes express so many things: the wisdom of youth, optimism, wonder, deep thought, mystery, mischief, pride, industry, amusement, bemusement, questioning, playfulness and the wisdom of age. The subjects are lit in a casual way, often using natural light or an obvious flash that gives a "snap-photographs. They are artfully and caringly composed. On first glance, this is a bunch of pictures of people you may or may not know. How important is that? Let's consider that, for most of us who aren't famous enough to be written about, our photographs are the only record that exists that we have passed through this life. They are history for the ordinary person. Viewing them stimulates oral history as people recall the events surrounding the moment captured on film. We understand the importance of this history by how well we preserve and care for our family photo albums. They are often the only possession that we would run into a burning house to save. So, on second glance, we can say that here we have an art show that expresses emotions, celebrates our best qualities and helps us share our collective oral histories. That looks pretty good to me.

Obituaries

Mary Cunningham

Mary Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of a former Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church pastor, died peacefully on February 26, 2005, her 89th birthday, at the Asbury Methodist Village in Gaithersburg.

A memorial service will be held at the church at 40 Ridge Road this Saturday, March 5 at 10:30 a.m. Friends are welcome to come and reminisce about the early days of the parish.

Born in Waverly, W. Va., Mary Smith married her high school sweetheart Clifton Cunningham and they served at churches in that state, then Mt. Airy, Md., and moved to Greenbelt in 1965.

At 49A and later 37L Ridge Road, she displayed her passions for gardening and cooking. Besides sons Dennis and Michael (now of Parkway and the former co-owner of Greenbelt Video), the Cunninghams helped raise three grandsons.

Methodists were worshiping in a multipurpose room in those early days; Clifton Cunningham pastored the church from 1970 to 1979 and led the drive to raise funds for a sanctuary to be added to the building.

Mrs. Cunningham was active in the church's Society and was also heavily into crafts. When Michael's parents moved to Asbury in the 1990s, he discovered 40 boxes of crafts (which he donated to Asbury). He was reminded of her love of blue; half her clothes were of that color.

She was preceded in death by her husband of 57 years, son Dennis, grandson Craig, four brothers and four sisters.

Donations in her memory can be made to the Alzheimer's Association, 11240 Waples Mill Rd., Suite 402, Fairfax, VA 22303 or to the Asbury Foundation, 201 Russell Ave., Gaithersburg, MD 20877 (Attn: Asbury Methodist Village Benevolency Fund).

Synagogue Will Celebrate 50th Anniversary on Mar. 5

by Jordan Choper

On Saturday evening March 5 Mishkan Torah will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the dedication of its original building by holding an evening of food, music and dancing. Present and former members will be attending. They will be marking what would have been a very unusual event if it occurred elsewhere, but in Greenbelt in the 1950s it was very characteristic and perhaps expected.

The history of the construction of the original building of the Jewish Community Center of Prince George's County (which is still the official name of Mishkan Torah) is unique. Many of the original members are no longer alive or no longer residing in Greenbelt. But they left behind the story of how the building came into being.

Due to outside pressure, the two Jewish communities in Greenbelt in the early 1950s came together to build a community center which could also be used as a sanctuary. The two communities were divided on their outlooks on Judaism. One community was more religiously observant and the other was more socially identified than religiously identified with the greater Jewish community. The outside pressure was the "red scare" of Mc-Carthyism. Living in Greenbelt, which was then considered somewhat of a "communistic" town by the arch-conservatives in the area, and not belonging to an organized "church" was double proof that you were most probably a communist!

Architectural plans for the community center were designed as a class project of the Howard University School of Architecture. But there were not enough funds to hire a contractor. Being optimists, they thought that they could build it themselves without mechanical tools. When other people in Greenbelt saw what these amateurs were doing, they organized an informal group of volunteers to help. As a result the building of the original edifice took more than four years to complete with work being done on weekends and in the long summer evenings.

The original building had a contemporary 1950s modern look. A school addition was added in the late 1960s and the roof was redesigned last year, thereby eliminating the problems of a flat roof.

Mishkan Torah is still a small synagogue/community center, and retains its unique approach to Judaism, reflecting its origin. It is dually affiliated with both the Conservative and Reconstructionist movements.

Last week's winter storms caused the loss of 40 percent of normal donations of blood by the American Red Cross. Homeless Men Sheltered At Saint John's Church

by Melissa Sites

Seventeen homeless men received hospitality and sustenance at St. John's Episcopal Church of Beltsville during the week of February 13-20. St. John's participated for the 13th year in the Safehaven Program, an outreach of Help-by-Phone, Inc. In this program many churches in northern Prince George's County work together by each providing one week of shelter for homeless men during the winter season. Greenbelt's churches also participate in this program.

Safehaven supplements programs organized by the county and other welfare agencies in the area. Having food and shelter taken care of gives these men a chance to get back on their feet.

The men who stayed at St. John's found a warm meal and a bunk for the night. Families provided home-style meals which they shared with the men, then stayed for the evening to watch videos, play games and talk. Recent-release DVDs were provided free of charge by Greenbelt Video.

Church members made sure the men had toiletries, bus tokens, breakfast and bag lunches. Fairland Aquatics Center, as they have for many years, provided shower facilities for the men.

Located at the intersection of Route One and Powder Mill Road, St. John's is a small and friendly church, with the mission of providing hospitality and sustenance to all. The church's volunteer opportunities are focused on this mission, including Safehaven, Bread for the World and SHARE, a program delivering bags of groceries at below cost.

St. John's is also active in supporting the families of Transitional Housing at Springhill Lake, where members also donate bags of groceries through SHARE, as well as holding special donation drives at Christmas, Easter and back-to-school times.

As light filters through the stained glass and the sanctuary is filled with the strains of sacred music, St. John's has a reassuring atmosphere of continuity and permanence. Through programs like Safehaven, it stays vibrant and active in the world today.

Metro Service Yard to Get New Building

Planning and Community Development Director Celia Craze has reported that the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Administration (WMATA) will be undertaking improvements at the Greenbelt Metro Service Yard across the Beltway from the Metro station. Metro plans to increase its trains to eight cars in length and will be purchasing 120 new cars. WMATA will be consolidating its "backshop" operations for efficiency, according to Craze, and will be constructing a new two-story general maintenance building at the Greenbelt yard.

The new building will be 72,000 square feet and it will be constructed on an area currently used for surface parking. Parking will be replaced through the elimination of storage and realignment of other parking areas, Craze said. There will be no increase in impervious surfaces associated with the building program and the building will not impact any environmentally sensitive or forested areas. Contract work is expected to begin this month.

CALL FOR DESIGNERS TO DESIGN AND MANAGE CONSTRUCTION OF A MEMORIAL HONORING INDIVIDUAL GREENBELT RESIDENTS

The City of Greenbelt is seeking a professional or team of professionals to design and oversee construction of a community memorial. The ideal candidate or team would have experience with exhibit design, architecture and the arts.

For many years, the City has been seeking a method to honor deceased City residents who have demonstrated a high level of service, dedication and commitment to the community. The City has decided to create an official City memorial. Conceptually, the memorial is envisioned as a list of honoree names on a large plaque or sculpture displayed in a prominent location. It would also include a podium or kiosk containing one page of biographical information about each honoree.

Interested designers should contact the City at 301-474-8000 or by email at dmoran@greenbeltmd.gov to request an information package. The deadline for responding to this call is March 31, 2005.

helping with the videotaping and broadcasting.

Palau won a national SAVVY award from the City-County Communications and Marketing Association for a video produced on the ACE (Advisory Committee of Education) Reading Club. The program won the top award for the citizen participation category. Book reviews given by students at various city schools are videotaped. Close to 1,000 students were involved in this program, she said.

Among the 70 programs she produced in fiscal year 2004 were 20 segments of the ACE Reading Club, Creative Kids Camp plays, Greenbelt museum lectures, Labor Day events and more.

Oprah

Most recently, Palau produced a videotape promoting Greenbelt as a small town that should be featured on the Oprah Winfrey Show, after she learned that the TV personality wanted to do a show about a small town. A rush job, in order to quickly bring Greenbelt to the attention of Winfrey, Palau did the videotaping over a weekend, interviewing as many Greenbelters as possible. She found a young Greenbelt man, Jesse Goldberg-Strassler, to do the narrating.

She told the club that she expected the video to be sent to Winfrey shortly and shown on Channel 71 soon thereafter.

Another of Palau's responsibilities is maintaining the city's website. She is now working on providing a more interactive site. For example, persons interested in seeking employment with the city will be able to apply over the internet.

Palau is also liaison to Comcast Cable, which provides cable service in the city under a city franchise. She participates in a county-wide committee of governments providing franchises to the cable company. That committee is developing an intergovernmental information network.

The city has now made arrangements with the Greenbelt library to place some of its videos there for interested citizens who do not have cable access to check out and view. Also, she said, GATE is making some of its tapes available at the video store in Roosevelt Center.

Palau summed up her job as telling people how great Greenbelt is, something she obviously enjoys doing.

Also honored by the Democratic club as a political Valentine Sweetheart was Heather Morrison, a Takoma Park city councilmember and Maryland chair of the Kerry campaign.

ing conceptual site plans that required needed public facilities to be included in an official plan or a commitment from the developer to pay for the improvements prior to approval being granted. Roads

This was not the case with Greenbelt Station where, in particular, public road improvements were determined to be necessary to support the dense development planned for the property. The county and developer had planned to phase-in development of the property as road improvement plans were officially adopted, a procedure commonly done in other developments but not permitted under the particular laws governing this development as a Metro Planned Community. Approval of the conceptual site plan was a prerequisite for approval of the preliminary plan of subdivision. Hence, the court voided both approvals.

Error

In submitting its request for reconsideration, the developer said the Planning Board could do so because there had been an error in law made and that this was a basis upon which reconsideration was possible. The developer further proposed a plan for financing public road improvements in which the property would be legally bound to pay for the costs of these improvements, including ramps to and from the Beltway for traffic coming from and going to the east, if public financing, as is being sought, does not become available.

At the March 17 Planning Board meeting, scheduled for 9 a.m., the board is expected to decide either to reconsider the approvals or not do so - possibly by a simple motion, or lack thereof, with little debate. If the board votes to reconsider, then it will schedule the matter on a future agenda to consider the merits of the reconsideration proposed by the developer. If it does not reconsider, then the developers will have to begin again with the Planning Board by submitting a conceptual site plan for the full plan-review process.

The Greenbelt City Council has not yet taken a position on the request for reconsideration.

Agreement

At one time, prior to the court decision, it appeared that the city and Metropark had reached agreement on a development process that would satisfy the city's concerns. That agreement included annexation of the south core to the city. It is presently an unincorporated area adjacent to not only Greenbelt but also Berwyn Heights and College Park.

Since the court decision, there have been further indications that the city and Metropark might come to some type of an agreement. In a February 3 article by Natasha Brown in the Greenbelt edition of the Gazette, Daniel Colton of Greenbelt Metropark is reported to have said that Metropark is willing to offer Greenbelt annexation of the development's south core and work with the city on other issues.

In a December 15 presentation of legislative issues to Greenbelt's delegation to the Maryland General Assembly the council told the legislators that the city was opposed to the public funding of the ramps from the Beltway to Greenbelt Station. The statement then went on to say, "However, the matter of the ramps has been included in settlement negotiations that have occurred in the past with representatives of Greenbelt Station and may occur in the future."

City Reimbursed For Court Appeal

The City of Greenbelt has been reimbursed for some of its expenses related to its appeal of the approvals of the conceptual site plan and preliminary plan of subdivision for Greenbelt Station. The reimbursements were ordered by the District Court when the Maryland Court of Appeals agreed with the city that the approvals did not comply with the county law governing such approvals.

City Manager Michael Mc-Laughlin informed the Greenbelt City Council that the city had received a check from the Prince George's County government in the amount of $1,663.80 as its share of the reimbursement of expenses. McLaughlin expects other checks to be rendered by Greenbelt Metropark, L.L.C., and the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Rally Supports Elected School Board

In commemoration of the 40th Anniversary of the Selmato-Montgomery march for voting rights there will be a March 7 rally advocating restoring an elected school board in Prince George's County. City Police Receive Canine Team Awards

On Saturday, February 5 the United States Police Canine Association, Region Three, held its awards banquet at the Greenbelt American Legion. Two canine teams from the Greenbelt Police Department received the Triple Crown award, which consists of certification in patrol dog, tracking and narcotics detection. They were Canine Unit Supervisor Cpl. Robert Musterman with his partner Cigo and MPO John M. (Mike) Dewey with his partner Duke. Only seven teams in the region received this award.

Additionally, Dewey and Duke received a first place award in tracking and MPO Randy Marks and his partner Baron received a first place award in the novice class. MPO Barry P. Byers, also a Greenbelt police canine handler, received the President's Award for coordinating the banquet and for service to the organization above and beyond the call of duty.

Dewey and Byers are both on the Region Three Board of Directors. Dewey has been the treasurer for approximately two years and Byers has been a trustee for about five months.

Police, SHA, ERHS Get Seatbelt Awards

Representatives of the Greenbelt Police Department, Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) and the Maryland State Highway Administration (SHA) were recognized by the Maryland Highway Office at the State Highway Administration and the Committee for Safety Belt Use, Inc., for exemplary seatbelt use by their employees and students throughout 2004.

The awards ceremony, which took place at the BWI Airport Marriott, featured special recognition of businesses, schools, religious institutions and agencies after at least 88 percent of their populations were observed wearing seatbelts on at least two occasions.

To qualify for the award, participants conducted two observational seatbelt surveys in their parking lots during regular business hours. These surveys were spaced at least 30 days apart to indicate sustained usage rates and were conducted according to guidelines provided by the Governor's Highway Safety Office at the Maryland Highway Administration. Maryland now boasts the highest seatbelt compliance rate on the east coast and one of the highest in the country. Eighty-nine percent of Maryland motorists use seatbelts as they travel. Employees of the SHA, located at the intersection of Kenilworth Avenue and Crescent Road, recorded a usage rate of 98 percent and the rate for students of ERHS was 94 percent. The employees of the Greenbelt Police Department observed a usage rate of 100 percent. Surveys have also shown that the average overall seatbelt usage rate for Greenbelt residents is 91 percent.

McClure Gets Life For Osborne Murder

On February 28, U.S. District Court Judge Deborah K. Chasanow sentenced Cornell W. McClure to life in prison, sparing him the death penalty. According to "The Washington Post," Judge Chasanow said that the aggravating factors involved in the killing did not outweigh the evidence of McClure's difficult childhood and other mitigating circumstances. The judge also said that McClure's co-defendant, Rufus J. Millegan, Jr., who pleaded guilty and received a life sentence, was just as culpable as McClure.

According to testimony, McClure and Millegan believed that Tessa Osborne had set up the robbery of Millegan's apartment. On May 2, 2001, they lured her into a vehicle as she was walking to work at the Greenbelt Co-op, drove her to the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center and shot her 11 times.

On February 3, 2005, after a six-day trial, Chasanow convicted McClure of first degree murder, kidnapping and a weapons charge. Because the crimes took place on federal property, McClure was tried in U.S. District Court and federal prosecutors were seeking the death penalty against him.

Bridgette Osborne, Tessa's mother, was quoted by "The Washington Post" as saying, "The sentence doesn't change the fact that I've lost my daughter. I think the judge presided fairly over the case. It's something I wish I never had to go through." She also praised FBI agents, U.S. Park Police and federal prosecutors for their diligent work on the case.

Defendant Pleads Guilty in SHL Murder

On Tuesday, March 1 Dialo Isiah Shalto, 27, of Adelphi pled guilty to second degree murder in Circuit Court in Upper Marlboro for the July 11, 2004 fatal shooting of Carlton Anthony Sharpe, 20, of Breezewood Drive in Greenbelt. Shalto made his plea after a jury had been selected for the trial but before opening statements. Sentencing is scheduled for April 15.

Sharpe had been talking to a friend in front of an apartment building in Springhill Lake when they were approached by several men. An altercation ensued and several shots were fired. His friend escaped and called police. Sharpe was dead when police arrived.

County, Nextel Aim For School Bus GPS

Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) and Nextel Communications, Inc., are collaborating to deploy a Global Positioning Satellite (GPS) wireless system on more than 1,300 school buses by the end of the school year. This will allow administrators to track the location of all PGCPS buses in real time. PGCPS is the first school district in the state to use GPS in all its buses. The system will transmit latitude and longitude information to the dispatch center, allowing PGCPS personnel to monitor location information on buses as they pick up and drop off children, helping to increase efficiency, reduce operating costs and improve safety. PGCPS buses transport nearly 100,000 students twice daily. According to "School Bus Fleet," a national trade magazine, PGCPS ranks fifth in the nation for its number of daily riders.

the shelter, a welcome haven against the blowing snow. City Manager Michael McLaughlin and Assistant City Manager David Moran, Delegate Justin Ross, County Councilmember Douglas Peters and several postal officials, including District Manager Timothy Haney of the Capital Performance Cluster in Brentwood, huddled under the canvas covering.

They were soon joined by the mayor and Greenbelt City Councilmembers Edward Putens, Rodney Roberts and Konrad Herling. Only Councilmember Leta Mach was missing, having been stranded in St. Louis by the storm.

Hoyer

Also missing for a time was the featured speaker himself, Congressman Hoyer. Then suddenly a car pulled up and out he leaped, formally dressed in suit and tie but without what seemed that afternoon's uniform for everyone else, a dark and securely buttoned overcoat.

"Who scheduled this?" he laughed, as he ran to the shelter.

Confessing he had inadvertently left his coat at home as he dashed out to an early meeting, he promised a very short speech indeed in honor of the occasion. The mayor's speech was short as well - commendations and thanks to the many persons, including the Congressman, whose work had led up to this moment.

Then Davis, the three members of council and Hoyer moved outside the shelter to where beribboned shovels waited for their ceremonial use in lifting the heavy clay.

Before departing, Hoyer, well aware of Greenbelters' concerns that some form of postal facility still remain in the Roosevelt Center, promised that "a presence" will be maintained there. According to Davis, this seems likely, since two Roosevelt Center merchants have so far expressed an interest in hosting such a facility.

The new 20,364 square foot building will sit on a five-acre lot. It will be home to 55 postal employees who provide service to 12,200 customers. The building will incorporate a new postal retail store and three retail workstations as well as 1,368 post office boxes. The property will accommodate 30 customer parking spaces and two handicapped spots.

Greenbelt Author Releases Poetry Book, "Unshackled"

by Jim Lara

When Peggi Jenyl Trusty was in the 5th grade she submitted an entry in a poetry contest at her school. That winning entry, titled "Dreams," was the beginning of her love of writing. Over the years her hard work of writing various poems culminated in a collection book called "Unshackled" which was released in early February.

Trusty, 29, dedicated the book to her three children, ages 3, 6 and 7. The poems were written over the last 15 years. The work reflects several subjects such as her experiences with family and friends, living as an African-American and the September terrorist attacks of 2001.

'Sometimes it's hard for people to articulate what they feel and once they read my book, they can say 'Oh, that's how I felt about a person or situation," said Trusty.

She said that each poem would vary in the amount of time it would take to write from three minutes to six months. A favorite of hers is "Wordplay," which took a minute to write and is a fun and sensual poem. The following is a verse from that work: "I should refrain from saying so. My lips don't usually form words like this. But since I'm here, let me kiss you with words that are as succulent as ripe fruit dripping ever so slowly into your hands.'

According to Trusty, poetry is a hard topic to sell and it was hard trying to get her work published. She ultimately went to a self-publishing company where, unlike other publishing houses which would help sell the book, she had the sole responsibility to promote it herself. Trusty will go on tour in March to host readings of her book in Dallas, Texas, and Huntsville, Ala.

She's also currently working on her first novel, titled "Crucified," which is a fictional story of a person's conversion during the time of Christ.

When asked what people want in reading any book, Trusty said it's all about finding something they can relate to.

"It's creating characters that readers can identify with. It's important that they can get an intellectual and emotional response from the work," she said. City Asks for More Time on ICC

Mavor Judith Davis has sent a joint letter to Nelson Castellanos, administrator for the Federal Highway Administration -Baltimore Division and Neil Pedersen, administrator for the Maryland State Highway Administration to extend the time for public comment on the Intercounty Connector (ICC) Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) to June 3 and to schedule a public hearing in Laurel. Davis also requested extending public comment for all resource and local agencies to 60 days beyond the close for public comment and to provide free copies of volumes 1 and 2 of the DEIS to each incorporated, nonprofit community organization that requests one and a hard copy of the full DEIS to the Coalition for Smarter Growth.

In her February 24 joint letter, Davis expressed concern that there has been so little time to review and comment about the DEIS and that part of this time occurred over the December holidays. She notes that the DEIS comprises 8,500 pages and covers complex, highly technical issues. She also notes that the planning staff for the ICC had posted a corrupt version of the Socioeconomic and Land Use Technical Report on the official ICC web site for nearly two months.

This time the State Highway Administration is charging nearly $400 for a single copy of just two of the DEIS 10 volumes, Davis contends. When the 1997 DEIS was produced, it was distributed free of charge to each community organization that requested one. The price charged this time represents a cost of more than 25 cents a page.

Beltway Plaza Card Show Brings Negro Leaguers

by Matt Johnson

The Beltway Plaza Mall's trading card show, which took place all day from February 25 through 27 at Center Court, was no ordinary event for traders to swap sports cards and merchandise – it boasted two former Negro Leaguers and the widow of a third.

Hubert "Bert" Simmons was there representing the Baltimore Elite Giants of the 1950s, the Farley Stars of the late 1940s and many other baseball teams no longer in existence. The righthanded pitcher/outfielder was inducted into the North Carolina A&T State University Sports Hall of Fame in 1978. For him, playing in the Negro Leagues was "doing something [he] wanted to do"- he loves the game of baseball.

The 80-year-old Simmons said he was at the mall on the cool but sunny afternoon of February 26 to "educate the public [as to] what the Negro Leagues is all about." Negro League baseball was all about the love of the game, an apothegm thrown around in today's high-paid and high-class sports nation. Journeymen like Simmons played through the turmoil of segregation and had little money or fame to show for it.

"What happened to me in baseball happened to me in life," said Simmons, who was forced to ride in the back of the bus on the way to active duty in the U.S. Army during World War II. He said he was relegated to the back on the way home as well – despite serving two years of his young life fighting in a foreign country. He compared his segregated unit to segregated baseball in the 1940s and '50s.

Geraldine Day, the widow of former Negro Leaguer Leon Day, had a memorabilia table of her own adjacent to that of Simmons; both flashed historic merchandise from the littleknown, little-talked-about days of Negro League baseball. Leon Day was a hard-throwing pitcher who also played the infield and the outfield. In his 22 years of baseball, perhaps his greatest achievement was beating the legendary Satchel Paige in the Negro World Series, striking out 12 batters in a 4 to 1 victory. Leon often struggled to make a regular salary despite his efforts.

"He played for nothing because he loved the game," said Day of her husband. Leon Day was inducted to the Puerto Rico Hall of Fame in 1993 and the National Baseball Hall of Fame in '95. Geraldine Day accepted the induction plaque to the National Baseball Hall of Fame on behalf of her husband, who died six days after his nomination.

Day showed a tape detailing the successes of her late husband and players like him to attract shoppers to her table. Simmons signed baseball cards, hats and other sundries.

Baseball enthusiasts took advantage of this opportunity. Lauren Boyd, a Greenbelter who has followed the New York Yankees for over 40 years, was present. African American shoppers were especially drawn toward Day, Simmons and Jim Bland, another former Negro Leaguer, while others flocked to neighboring tables to buy, sell and trade some more. One table had on display, among many other football cards, a $60 rookie card of former Oakland Raiders quarterback Ken Stabler.

Ray Banks, a Baltimore resident, stood among the baseball fans, sporting a throwback Negro League jersey. "My passion is to keep the legacy alive for the Negro League players," he said. "When I retire this is what I'm going to do."

Alice and Ellen Noll of Lastner Lane are volunteer puppy raisers for Guiding Eyes for the Blind (GEB). They have just seen their GEB puppy graduate as a full-fledged guide dog. Tommy, a black male Labrador Retriever, had been with Alice and Ellen since he was just eight weeks old. Now fully trained to be part of a Guiding Eyes team, Tommy is fulfilling his potential as a working guide dog with Guadalupe Montiel in New Rochelle, New York.

Living in the Noll's Greenbelt home, Tommy was provided with many different opportunities for socialization, including visits to shopping malls, train stations and restaurants. It takes a great deal of commitment to raise a Guiding Eyes puppy but, as Ellen said "I knew from the beginning that Tommy was one very special puppy and I'm very proud of him and all he has accomplished."

The GEB program has about 500 puppy raisers from Maine to North Carolina. These caring, dedicated people are the "heart and soul" of the Guiding Eyes program. Puppy raisers nurture the young pups and familiarize them with everyday situations. They establish the loving human bond that is the foundation for the puppies' future role in a guide dog team. Puppy raisers are provided the necessary training and support from a volunteer area coordinator. After a year and a half puppy raisers return the dogs to Guiding Eyes for evaluation. Dogs that pass their tests begin formal training with GEB guide dog instructors. After four to six months of rigorous training the dogs have learned to assist their future blind partner in traveling safely and with more confidence.

It costs approximately $40,000 to match a Guiding Eyes dog with a blind partner but there is no cost to the graduate. Funded entirely by contributions from individuals, corporations, foundations and organizations, Guiding Eyes covers all costs. For more information on raising a Guiding Eyes puppy call Guiding Eyes for the Blind at 1-866-GEB-LABS (1-866-432-5227) or visit the GEB website at www.guidingeyesbcweb.org.

Public Works

Crews were called in early on Thursday morning and once again worked throughout the day and night and again on Friday, salting and plowing. The sidewalk crew worked on Thursday and Friday to clear walkways. Work continued on Friday to push the snow back on the streets, keep access to city buildings and facilities open and clear what snow melted and refroze overnight.

Former player and Hall of Famer Hubert "Bert" Simmons, 80, was at Beltway Plaza last weekend to educate the public about Negro League baseball. He talked about the love of the game and the effects of segregation in the sport and in his everyday life. In the background (sitting) was Geraldine Day, widow of former Negro Leaguer and Hall of Famer Leon Day, who also staffed a table filled with memorabilia.
