City Manager Cites Property Tax Drops in Pre-budget Update

by Kathleen Gallagher

The Greenbelt City Council held two back-to-back work-sessions on Saturday, March 3 beginning at 10 a.m. The first meeting, attended by the full council, was an update from City Manager Michael McLaughlin on the city's financial and programmatic situation as the time approaches to set the municipal budget for Fiscal Year 2013. Also in attendance were Assistant City Manager David Moran and about 15 audience members.

McLaughlin will present his proposed FY13 budget for the City of Greenbelt at the regular city council meeting on Monday, March 26. Although the formal presentation used to be the first public step in a process that begins months earlier at the staff level, some years ago members of council asked that the manager give them a financial update and preview of any major budgetary issues in advance of the formal presentation.

McLaughlin opened with the major news that although until late January the city was close to being on target with the current year's (FY12) budget, with both revenues and expenditures tracking slowly, the situation had changed fairly dramatically since then. It had been known earlier that real estate revenues would run $350,000 less than anticipated in the FY12 budget, but it was expected that this loss could be offset by savings in expenditures. He said that it now appeared that the city's expenditures would exceed revenues due to additional commercial property tax abatements that had been received of more than $300,000. He added that all but one of the office buildings in Capital Office Park has received substantial abatements for this fiscal year and the two prior years.

FY12 revenues may also be down because a delay in the implementation of the speed camera program will likely mean that the $200,000 in budgeted revenues from this source will not be met. In total, the delay in the initiation of camera revenue and real estate abatements would account for about $800,000 in lost revenue.

McLaughlin said that in most other areas revenues were running as budgeted, including corporate personal property taxes, hotel/motel taxes and highway user fees. Income tax is running below budget. Income from fines and forfeitures is also lower than normal because of vacancies in staff positions that have only recently been filled.

Fortunately, expenditures have also been running low so far this year. Some of the savings are attributable to retirements and reduced overtime and benefit costs

Hollywood Timidly Told Story That Happened in Greenbelt

by James Giese

The determination by the U.S. Department of the Navy that three or possibly five Greenbelt employees in the same department were security risks in 1953, all Jewish, is an important episode in Greenbelt history. It should be documented in greater detail. Articles by Anthony Lewis in the now defunct Washington Daily News focusing on the appeal by Abraham Chasanow of his designation as a security risk gave the episode national publicity, earning Lewis a Pulitzer Prize.

These articles were not only about Chasanow, however, but about Greenbelt. How many other small cities can boast of being the good subject in Pulitzer Prize-winning articles?

How many towns can boast of playing a significant role in a major Hollywood movie starring notable actors like Ray Milland and Ernest Borgnine, even when the story was fictionalized?

On February 10 an unusually large crowd of 50 persons attended a regular Friday afternoon session of Explorations Unlimited to see the movie "Three Brave Men," the fictionalized account of Abe Chasanow's suspension and termination from the Navy Department, the support he received from people in his community and the eventual clearing of his name and reinstatement. A brief discussion, led by Jim Link, followed the movie.

The Episode

To recap the actual historic event and movie: as many as five Greenbelt men, all Jews and all Navy employees, were suspended as security risks in 1953, during the peak of hysteria over fear that adherents of Communism were determined to subvert and overthrow our country's democratic form of government. Wisconsin Senator Joseph McCarthy notoriously fanned the flames of fear, making wild accusations of Communist infiltration of the government, most lacking any evidence of truth.

Of the three men identified, Michael Salzman reportedly moved away from Greenbelt and it is unknown (at least to me) what became of him. The other two, Isadore Parker and Chasanow, continued to live in Greenbelt, fought the Navy actions and were eventually exonerated. Because of the series of articles Lewis wrote, Chasanow's cause became highly publicized. Due to this publicity, plus the waning of the influence of McCarthy who was eventually discredited, the Navy Department backed down, reinstating the two men.

Greenbelt's Role

The City of Greenbelt played a significant role in the story. Some of the people who denounced these men were from Greenbelt, possibly co-workers, since some 13 Greenbelters worked in the U.S. Hydrographic Office in Suitland. (Janet Parker, then-wife of Isadore, who attended the movie discussion, described employee upset at not being sent home on hot days from non-air conditioned offices.)

Exactly who made the accusations is speculative – not known either to those accused or to the public.

Chasanow had played a particularly controversial role in formation of the housing cooperative, Greenbelt Veterans Housing Corporation (GVHC, now Greenbelt Homes, Inc.). As an attorney, he had helped the cooperative to organize, then becoming GVHC's secretary on its board of directors.

Many residents did not support the cooperative's acquisition of most of the housing built and owned by the federal government. Some did not or could not afford to buy into the co-op, wishing to continue paying the low rents they had enjoyed under government ownership. There came a time when those refusing to join the co-op had to move out to make room for co-op buyers and Chasanow, as secretary, sent out the eviction notices.

But the town came around to support Chasanow and Parker. In this, they were led by the

Women's History Month

March is Women's National History Month. In observance, the News Review this week is running one of the monthly articles by Sandra Lange which explores the role of women in the early days of Greenbelt.

75th Anniversary

For 75 Years Greenbelt Women Molded City Life

by Sandra A. Lange

Greenbelt's pioneer women were strong, independent leaders who greatly influenced the political and social life of the town. Six weeks after the first town residents moved to Greenbelt in 1937 they established a Journalistic Club and adopted a plan to print six weekly journals.

The Greenbelt Cooperator (the name changed to News Review in 1954 to clarify its independent status) printed community news, often by and about women. There was a "Poison Ivy" column to air gripes and a Mrs. Greenbelt section including recipes, editorials and news stories of interest to women.

Female journalists comprised much of the editorial, proofreading, copy editing and reporting staffs although they had to quit often for periods of time when they became pregnant. During the paper's first 25 years there were eight female editors including one, Virginia Beauchamp, now 91, who was editor in 1962 and is still on staff today.

Women ranging in age from their mid-20s to mid-80s are the backbone of the News Review's board and staff. Their stability, longevity and dedication have enabled the paper to be printed every week without missing an issue. The longest serving News Review staffer is President Emeritus Elaine Skolnik, who began writing the Our Neighbors column in 1954 and continues today as news editor, working from her apartment at Leisure World in Montgomery County.

Editor Mary Lou Williamson joined the staff soon after moving to Greenbelt in 1962. One of her first writing assignments was the special 25th Anniversary booklet. Assistant Editor Barbara Likowski, business staffer Joanne Tucker

THANKS!

Many thanks to Melissa Sites, Amy Kraft, the Friends of the New Deal Café Arts (FONDCA), the New Deal Café and all who attended the fun sing-along at the New Deal Café on Leap Day. Amy played the piano and Melissa played the guitar plus led the singing.

We had a great time singing a wonderful mix of folk songs and old standards. We were able to request some favorites, sing in rounds, try our voices at harmony and even have songs interpreted with sign language. The evening was like a wonderful night around the campfire!

Many of us would love to meet again . . . soon! Stay tuned.

Council Defers B-WP Vote, Schedules Public Hearing

by Kathleen Gallagher

U.S. Congressman Dutch Ruppersberger (Baltimore County) successfully requested $1 million in funding under the FY10 Omnibus Appropriations bill to undertake a feasibility study for widening the Baltimore-Washington Parkway (BWP) from four lanes to six from the Baltimore Beltway (I- 695) south to New York Avenue in D.C. The third and final public meeting of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway Widening Feasibility Study was held on February 16 in Greenbelt.

As reported in greater detail in the February 23 issue of this paper, among the findings of the feasibility study were that widening the BWP would not alleviate congestion for the longer term, might have substantial negative community, environmental and safety impacts and, depending on which of four widening options would be selected, would cost anywhere from $343 million to $565 million to implement.

At Councilmember Leta Mach's request this topic was placed on the agenda of the February 27 regular council meeting for comment now that the public meetings were completed. Although council sent a letter enumerating its concerns about the project last year, it chose to wait to convey its recommendation until after the feasibility study was completed. Mach said that although the tenor of the report suggested that the project would likely not go forward, she thought it was time for council to be on record as opposing it. She made a motion to that effect, which Councilmember Konrad Herling seconded.

Mayor Judith Davis said that although she personally opposed the project, opinion among Greenbelt residents had been divided and that she thought that there should be an opportunity for people to express their opinions prior to council's taking a stand. Mach replied that she thought the findings of the feasibility study clearly indicated that support for the project was not tenable. Councilmember Edward Putens agreed that the study results were "pretty effective in shooting down the project."

Public Hearing

After discussion about the best timing for submitting a position on the project, council voted to first hold a public hearing during the March 12 regular council meeting to receive public comment. Putens asked the city manager to look into getting copies of some of the materials presented at the last feasibility study meeting.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts concluded by saying that he had wanted council to take a position last year. He said, "I think we need to state our opposition as soon as possible and fight as hard and as long as we can."

Gypsy Jazz Comes To New Deal Café

The Hot Club of DC plays at the New Deal Café on Friday, March 9 from 8 to 11 p.m. as part of Greenbelt's 75th Anniversary Celebration.

It all started 102 years ago, when guitarist virtuoso Jean-Baptiste "Django" Reinhardt was born in Liberchies, Belgium.

Django Reinhardt founded the Hot Club of France with master violinist Stephane Grappelli and developed an acoustic quintet with only stringed instruments: guitars, violin and upright bass. This musical genre, called "gypsy jazz," became popular in the 1930s, flirting with famous American jazz standards and memorable French songs, often spiced with a hint of Eastern European music. The style and tradition of acoustic jazz have been maintained and appreciated by jazz musicians through the years.

From the most passionate slow song, to the fastest dazzling swing, bossa nova, bolero, tango and waltz, Hot Club of DC celebrates the music of Reinhardt and Grappelli as it was played in the 1930s and as it has evolved today.

Obituaries

Todd Whitacre

Todd Whitacre, 46, died on February 21, 2012.

He is survived by his parents, Marjorie M. Whitacre of Greenbelt and H. Stephen Whitacre of Capon Bridge, W.Va.

A funeral service was held at Mowatt United Methodist Church on February 25 with Rev. Fay Lundin officiating. Interment was on February 26 at Baker United Methodist Church Cemetery in Baker, W.Va. Arrangements were by Borgwardt Funeral Home.

Memorial contributions may be made in Mr. Whitacre's name to Mowatt United Methodist Church, 40 Ridge Road, Greenbelt, or to the David Craig Memorial Scholarship Fund, Ltd., P.O. Box 761, Greenbelt, MD 20768.

In Memoriam

Todd Whitacre was only 46 years old, son of Marjorie M. Whitacre of Greenbelt and H. Stephen Whitacre of Capon Bridge, W.Va. He had aunts, uncles, cousins and a host of friends. He was laid to rest in the Baker United Methodist Church Cemetery, Baker, W.Va. on February 26.

He was a great friend. He loved to operate big machinery and did so until he was laid off and then, not able to find employment, did odd jobs.

Todd did yard work for me and always wanted to please you in what he did. He went out of his way to take a burden off you in whatever he did. He always wanted to know if he did the work to suit me and call any time if I needed something. He is missed.

He got the job of taking care of the Mowatt Methodist Church yard, again always asking if everything was ok and aiming to please.

He didn't always like to hear negative comments from people. He would discuss the situation with me and I would tell him I would speak with the people and all would be ok.

When the Craigs' old riding mower was on its last leg at the church, we began to look for a new one. One day Todd and his mother saw one on sale in the paper. Todd and I went to look at it and bought it. It was put on the back of Todd's truck and he brought it to the church. It was then we found we had no key and I went back to the store and got one, only to find out when I got back to the church we had a dead battery. We both were getting a little agitated at that point, took the mower back to the store and they gave Todd a new one which ran perfectly.

He was so happy mowing. I would drive into the church yard and he would wave or else drive to my car and say, "How am I doing?" "Wonderful," I would say. "Keep up the good work."

He will be missed. I have lost a truly good friend.

by Bunny Fitzgerald

The last meeting of the Golden Age Club was very well attended by members and guests. We enjoyed a very informative presentation by Bob Luddy on the Civil War in our immediate area. Maybe he'll come speak again

The speaker on March 14 will be Luisa Robles. Her topic will be "We Recycle - then what?" This should be of interest to all generations. I have been told that seniors do an excellent job recycling!

We were glad to hear club president Cathie Brannan is recovering from surgery on her hand and we are sending her happy thoughts.

Just a reminder - turn clocks ahead one hour March 11 for Daylight Savings Time.

Don't forget to sign up for the anniversary lunch to be held April 19 at the Holiday Inn on Route 1 near IKEA.

Reverend Terry Braund, minister at Greenbelt Community Church, and by Police Chief George Panagoulis. In part, Greenbelters gave their support because some of the so-called subversive organizations, in which the men were accused of membership, such as the co-ops, were liberal, but certainly not subversive, organizations. (The movie specifically mentions an association with the local newspaper.)

In the movie, Borgnine plays the role of Chasanow as Bernie Goldsmith. The three brave men of the movie are Goldsmith, his attorney, played by Ray Milland, and an assistant secretary of the Navy, played by Dean Jaegar-Goldsmith, for standing up and appealing the suspension and firing. The attorney was seen as brave for taking on the case at a nominal fee, the assistant secretary for reopening the case.

Janet Parker, who attended the discussion but did not watch the movie, told the group she had once seen the movie but did not like it, as was the case, she said, with many other Greenbelters. She assailed it for not mentioning that three men had lost their jobs, all of whom were Jews.

The Times

To better understand why these events happened, one has to understand the times. America was just beginning to recover from fighting a horrendous war. Our great war-time ally and friend, Joseph Stalin, had turned out to be a villain and a murderer. The Soviet Union had gobbled up Eastern Europe and made once-proud countries communistic puppets of the Soviet Union. Both the United States and Great Britain had found that Soviet agents had infiltrated high levels of government.

A strong feeling of anti-semitism pervaded much of the country at that time, with Jews banned from buying real estate in many areas. This feeling was strong enough to cause government leaders to discredit or ignore accounts of the Holocaust taking place in Nazi Germany and occupied lands and to deny entry to Jewish refugees. In the 1950s antisemitism was still a force, existing in Washington and even to a lesser extent in Greenbelt.

America had been suffering from economic depression up to World War II. This caused many to look for and support new ways to deal with economics and politics, including radical points of view from the right and particularly from the left, including socialism and Marxism.

To some at that time, the Soviet Union and Marxism appeared to be solutions for the hard times. "From each according to his abilities; to each according to his needs" was a motto offering promise to many, particularly to young idealists. Many groups then endorsed ideals sympathetic to the Soviet Union without being anti-American or communists.

Then along comes Greenbelt in the late 1930s, a utopian model community built by a liberal federal government program. Residents were encouraged to be actively involved in their community and the cooperative movement was encouraged, resulting in cooperative businesses, a cooperative newspaper, a cooperative nursery school, a cooperative health facility and eventually a cooperative housing corporation.

Then, after the war when the country came to realize the villainy of Soviet communism, along came Joe McCarthy, who for a time became one of the most powerful figures in the country by claiming to find communists infiltrating every nook and cranny of the federal government.

The country, as it often does, overreacted. Laws were passed to have everyone in government sign loyalty oaths. Many lost jobs because of past ties to organizations which then seemed harmless but which now were proclaimed "subversive." Government bureaucrats everywhere searched out their organizations to root out every disloyal employee prepared to overthrow democracy. The movie industry, torn asunder by government investigation as well, found communists and "communist sympathizers" within its highest echelons, resulting in numerous prominent figures being banned from the industry.

In 1953, when the Greenbelt men were fired, the hysteria was beginning to subside. The country was coming to realize that McCarthy was much wind and little substance. By 1956, when the movie was made, McCarthy had been discredited by the televised Army-McCarthy hearings.

Who Was Brave?

So who was brave? Chasanow, Parker and maybe Salzman and their families are certainly to be commended for enduring and successfully surviving what must have been a terrible ordeal. Chasanow's attorney, Joseph Fannelli. Perhaps. Defending security risks would have been a risky undertaking in that time.

The assistant secretary of the Navy, James H. Smith, Jr. Unlikely, despite what the movie implies. The Navy reversed course most likely from the bad publicity generated by the Lewis articles and public and political reaction to them.

The "brave" man of the movie who ordered a second investigation of Goldsmith to take place (after Lewis began writing articles) is the same man who chose to overrule a hearing panel and ordered Chasanow fired.

What about Anthony Lewis? At a time when careers could be jeopardized by support of anything that might be considered a risk to the country's security, did his reporting of the Chasanow affair constitute a brave act?

How about the citizens of Greenbelt who rallied to the support of Chasanow, some, as depicted in the movie and as told to me in person, personally disliked the man. Many were government workers. Were they brave to stand up for Chasanow and Parker?

Lastly, was the movie itself an act of bravery on the part of its producers, director and actors? This was one of the first, if not the first, Hollywood efforts to take on the effects of the anti-communism hysteria engendered by McCarthy and others. The movie industry had itself been torn apart by the congressional investigation. Was this for them a brave undertaking – even though done in an exceedingly mild way? The movie goes out of its way to make the Navy a hero, not a villain.

In spite of having two Academy Award winning stars in its cast, "Three Brave Men" did not become a well-regarded movie. It is now difficult even to find a copy. But for Greenbelt, it is of monumental importance in documenting one of the most traumatic episodes in the life of the community.

Documentation

It is unfortunate that there has not been greater research and documentation of the Chasanow-Parker-Salzman affair and its impact on the community. Perhaps it is still not too late. Some people, such as Janet Parker, the Chasanow children and residents of Greenbelt at the time, still living here with first-hand knowledge of what happened, could recount their stories. The Lewis articles could be found and compiled, along with other press accounts of the time. Who knows, perhaps Navy records of the episode are archived somewhere and could be made public.

During discussion after the movie showing, Jordan Choper postulated that the Chasanow-Parker-Salzman affair helped build the Jewish Community Center of Prince George's County, now Mishkan Torah Synagogue. He said the Navy firings caused the members of the Jewish community to come together and realize, more than ever, the need for a synagogue.

They took it upon themselves to build the structure, although they were mostly amateurs. He told how contractors, passing by, stopped to help, getting building corners to be properly squared. In fact, many members of the community joined to help construct the edifice.

Choper also told of the problem of electric sockets in part of the building not working and the reason for that fact. The congregation had built the walls and installed the roof before pouring the concrete floor. It had then become necessary to tear down part of a wall to pour the floor. Hauling concrete over installed electric lines had damaged the lines so that they failed to work.

Brenda Cooley noted how persons of the Catholic faith helped with the strong support of Father Dowgiallo. Bunny Fitzgerald noted how there was an altar at Greenbelt Community Church donated by the Mishkan Torah community in appreciation for the construction help provided by members of that church. Choper noted that the Greenbelt City Council had designated a Jewish Community Center Day and urged citizens to help out.

You don't believe that amateurs built the building? Take a look at the brickwork alignment in the front wall.

GATE Has Nonprofit Day for Taping PSAs

The Greenbelt Access Television (GATE) studio will hold a nonprofit day Saturday, March 17 from 10 a.m. to noon to allow Greenbelt-based nonprofit organizations to present a 30-second public service announcement.

On a first-come, first-served basis the PSAs will be taped and edited for showing between programs on the GATE Channels, Comcast 77 and Verizon Fios 19.

Organizational presenters should bring a draft script including name, their organizational name, a brief description of the mission or event to be publicized and contact information. Any additional supporting pictures should be brought in as jpegs on a CD. GATE recommends against wearing all black, all white or small patterns as those do not videotape well.

A professional grade Autoscript teleprompter is available so there is no need to memorize a script, though good familiarity with the contents is highly recommended. GATE is located on the second floor of the Greenbelt Community Center, across from the Multipurpose Room.

GATE is prohibited by law from promoting commercial organizations or commercial events including raffles, sales and lotteries. The next nonprofit PSA day is scheduled for April 21.

For further information call the GATE studio at 301-507-6581 or MaliaMurray@hotmail.com.

and this writer have logged more than 40 years each.

Ruth Taylor

Theodora “Teddy” Murray ran for the first town council in 1937 and lost. But the next year Ruth Taylor became Greenbelt’s first woman elected to the town council and the first elected woman official in Prince George’s County. She served from 1938 to 1941. In 1939 Taylor suggested an ordinance banning the wearing of shorts and bathing suits in the (Roosevelt) Center Mall. It wasn’t until July 1954 that Fran Herling (mother of Councilmember Konrad Herling) challenged the ordinance and was arrested. Her famous blue shorts are in the Greenbelt Museum collection.

Mary Jane Kinzer

One of the most formidable women in Greenbelt’s early history was Mary Jane Kinzer. In March 1940 Kinzer was appointed supervisor of Family and Community Services under the federal Farm Security Administration. According to one resident, “She had to pass on the eligibility for hordes of applicants.”

She also was instrumental in forming the first library, two public kindergartens and an adult education program. She organized the Greenbelt Citizens Association, the community band, the childcare center, the choral group. She encouraged the establishment of the Cooperative Nursery School and hired its first teacher.

In 1953 she resigned from government employment to become supervisor of Sales and Services for the new housing cooperative, now called Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI). For nearly three decades, Kinzer used her powerful position to determine whether an applicant wishing to purchase one of the homes was qualified or not. She continued in this job until her retirement in 1969.

Lenore Thomas

In 1937 Lenore Thomas was hired by the Works Progress Administration to carve the Mother and Child limestone statue for Greenbelt’s town center. Thomas worked alone in her Accokeek studio. The government paid her $7 per day to rent the air compressor she used and $5.50 per day for her work.

She also sculpted the friezes on the side of the Community Center that depict the Preamble to the Constitution. Thomas often expressed her gratitude for the job, which allowed her to practice her craft during those difficult post-Depression days. A future exhibit of her life and work is planned by the Greenbelt Museum.

Woman’s Club

Over the years many women joined The Woman’s Club of Greenbelt, organized in 1939 with 16 charter members. By 1950 it had grown to 54 members. The Woman’s Club provided financial support to the teen club’s “Drop Inn” center and helped raise funds for the Youth Center.

Members were active in the Red Cross, the USO and area hospitals. The club sold war bonds in the theater lobby and members served as airplane spotters. During World War II, the club had its name emblazoned on the side of a fighter plane in recognition of their being one of the most active chapters in the country. It disbanded in 1990 as its membership had aged and dwindled.

Elizabeth Harrington

In 1949 Elizabeth Harrington received the highest number of votes for town council and was elected by her colleagues as mayor of Greenbelt. She had already served on the town council for two years. She was the first woman elected mayor in the State of Maryland. In one interview, she announced, “I am a housewife first, last and always.”

Harrington attributed her success to not being a flag-waving feminist, although she had a master’s degree in religious education from Columbia University. She claimed that she “stumbled into politics But I came to realize that if you believed in community betterment, then there is no better place to work than at the political level.”

She felt that being in the community all day made her more aware of what needed to be done. “Whatever was going on, I knew about it,” she proclaimed.

In later years she saw herself as a role model, asserting that “if a woman is capable in the role of leadership, then she should get involved in politics. I deplore the fact that there are not more women in local politics,” she added.

She also felt her activism made her a more interesting person to her family. “It’s good to have a great outside interest that commands the totality of your being, the totality of your ability, so that you are not so steeped in dusting the house and keeping up with what the children are doing,” she concluded.

It took 20 years for another Elizabeth, this time Elizabeth “Betty” Maffay, to become the third woman elected to city council. And it wasn’t until 1993 that Antoinette “Toni” Bram became Greenbelt’s second woman mayor after a decade of serving on council.

Rhea Cohen

In 1968 Rhea Cohen, a crusading young mother not previously active in Greenbelt’s politics, led the Save Our Community Committee (SOCC). She battled the Board of Education’s plan to build a high school complex on property known as Parcel 2, near the unimproved Northway extended road.

Cohen’s SOCC joined forces with Citizens for a Planned Greenbelt to oppose the school site and the possible widening of Ridge Road to accommodate construction vehicles and school buses. The News Review, under the leadership of Al and Elaine Skolnik, published a barrage of articles on the subject.

Together, these organizations sparked the flame that ignited council and GHI to sue the school board. A triumphant citizenry heralded the school board’s decision in 1971 to purchase land on Greenbelt Road for what is now Eleanor Roosevelt High School. In 1971, newly elected councilwoman Cohen led another battle, this time against construction of a separate temporary sewage treatment plant for the Greenbriar Condominium project slated for construction on Greenbelt Road. Cohen and others objected to the sewage treatment plant being built during the county’s building moratorium because of the inadequate sewer system.

Elaine Skolnik honed her interviewing skills through detailed investigative reporting on this issue. Despite their efforts, county officials approved the plant but with conditions that provided what citizens felt were necessary safeguards. In 1974 the first Greenbriar residents moved in. The plant was hooked up to the public system in 1976 and Cohen went on to a career with the Corps of Engineers.

Through seven decades, these memorable women – and many others – paved the way for Greenbelt’s current leaders. Most had households to maintain and children to raise. Some had outside employment. But they worked hard for community betterment, as Elizabeth Harrington called it. They believed they had the ability and the responsibility to create a better Greenbelt.

Today, three women serve on the city council, more than at any other time. Judith Davis was first elected in 1993 and has served as mayor for over seven two-year terms. Leta Mach was first elected in 2003 and Silke Pope in 2009.

These are just a few of the great buys you will find at Co-op this week!

Two Attempted Burglaries Occur at Roosevelt Center

by Sue Krofchick

Two attempted burglaries within a week have occurred at businesses in Roosevelt Center. Both involve heavy objects being thrown into glass to try to gain access to the establishments.

"Evidence was recovered and is being processed by the Maryland State Police," said Cpl. Kelly Lawson, public information officer for the Greenbelt Police Dept.

In the first incident, an alarm coming from the Co-op Supermarket sounded in the early morning hours of Tuesday, February 21. One of the large windows forming the glass wall across from the row of cash registers was shattered but intact, except for a hole in the tempered safety glass. A brick found inside the store was reported to be the instrument causing destruction of the window. Burglars did not gain access inside.

"The majority of the cost for replacement (estimated to be $1,500) will be covered by insurance except for the deductible," which, according to store manager Bob Davis, is not known at this time.

Police again received an alarm in the early morning hours, this time on February 28, also a Tuesday, coming from the Greenbelt Sunoco located on Crescent Road near the Co-op.

Burglars using a landscaping rock approximately 8x8x6 inches initially threw it against the window nearest the cash register. The window shattered but remained intact. The same rock was then used to try to break the glass entrance door. This too shattered but remained intact. An attempt was made to remove a shard of glass in order to reach inside and turn the lock to the open position. This was unsuccessful.

An outside security camera from Roosevelt Center making sweeps of the view at intervals showed an automobile at the Sunoco at 12:25 a.m. The car was gone by 12:27 a.m. Glare from the service station windows prevented the capture of usable information.

"This is the first time in 27 years there has been an attempt to break in," said Bill Novick, owner-operator of the community service station. Insurance will cover the $1,800 cost to replace the door and window but Novick is responsible for covering the $500 deductible.

Novick said the glass in the windows and door are 4-ply safety glass, the equivalent of two windshields next to each other. The landscaping rock could not penetrate the glass and was found on the ground just outside the door.

Evidence found at the scene is being processed by the Maryland State Police. The Greenbelt Police Department is offering a reward of up to $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspect(s) in these two cases. Anonymous tips may be reported to either 1-866-411-TIPS or 240-542-2145.

Councilmember Leta Mach said one thing she would not support would be further deferrals of work on the theater building. McLaughlin assured her that he expected the theater to remain in the budget as an FY13 project.

When Councilmember Ed Putens asked if any more tax abatements were likely to surface this fiscal year, McLaughlin said that historically there was no pattern to them but that since such other corporate properties as the Maryland Trade Center, Beltway Plaza, and Greenbelt Homes, Inc. had received abatements in the past, the likelihood of changes with significant impact was reduced.

Noting that the city is forced to budget in part on the basis of revenue projections from the state, Putens asked how the city could deal with that level of uncertainty. McLaughlin replied that the way the city deals with it is to build in buffers to meliorate the effect of having to rely on estimates.

When Mayor Judith Davis opened the floor to questions from the audience, Bill Orleans asked if the city had ever considered challenging tax abatements. McLaughlin said the staff had talked about it but that the only local jurisdiction in the state that does so is Montgomery County. He said the additional staff and consultants that would be needed to undertake a challenge are expensive and that the assumption is that if only a county as well-heeled as Montgomery does it, the money that would be put in would likely not be well invested.

In sum, McLaughlin said that since the FY12 budget was adopted with a surplus of more than $300,000, and considering both cost and revenue reductions, expenditures for this year might exceed revenues by $400,000. Putting that in perspective, however, he said that in the prior year revenues exceeded expenditures by nearly $882,000, resulting in a fund balance increase for the two-year period of about $480,000.

Looking ahead to the FY13 budget, McLaughlin said it is still too early to say but that at this point he thinks that while it will not be easy, it will not be too painful. He said a concern is that if he cannot increase some of the necessary cushions and there is a revenue shortfall, either additional sources of income will have to be found or programs will have to be cut.

The city manager also reviewed a number of "good news" items in programs: progress on capital projects, a noticeable decline in crime from prior years, progress on sustainability measures in excess of the state's goals. As a new measurement for consideration, he announced that the city now has 1,500 friends on Facebook, which he cited as an index to the increasing exposure of the city's website.

Following the formal presentation of the budget on March 26, there are 10 budget worksessions scheduled, beginning on Wednesday, March 28 and ending with the final budget review on Monday, May 21. Public hearings on the budget will be held as part of regular council meetings on Monday, April 23 and Tuesday, May 29. The budget is scheduled for adoption at a regular council meeting to be held on Monday, June 4. The complete list of budget worksessions is available on the city's website at greenbeltmd.gov.

A Review

Delightful, Revisionist Comedy Has Talented, Enchanting Cast

by Jim Link

Tragedies end unhappily, frequently with a corpse-littered stage; comedies end happily, frequently with a wedding or two. Wickedly clever Chris Cherry has winnowed out the gore and belligerence of Homer's Odyssey and whipped up a magical soufflé, "Homeward Bound." This delightful, revisionist musical comedy is based on Odysseus' post-Trojan War, disaster-ridden, character-building voyage home to the loving arms of his faithful, resourceful, steely wife Penelope.

To help or harm Odysseus and Penelope is an energetic cast of 43 teens from various local high and middle schools, who had enormous fun singing, dancing and completely charming a packed house of 200 or so at the Greenbelt Community Center on Saturday, March 3.

The Greenbelt Recreation Department will present "Homeward Bound," the 12th annual Youth Musical, twice more this Saturday, March 10 at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. Like Circe's perfume, this play is pure "enchantment."

Cherry, who directs "Homeward Bound" and wrote its book, music and lyrics, has plenty of talented and capable help. Stefan Brodd (musical director, pianist), Nicole DeWald (production designer), Ian Brown-Gorrell (choreography and staging) and Scott Kincaid (lighting design) all make this musical scintillate.

Herewith are a few of Cherry's revisionist highlights:

His proto-feminist Penelope (the wonderful Christin Wright) and her handmaidens sing in favor of more progressive inheritance laws so Penelope can cease coping with her boorish clutch of greedy suitors. Later the same women sing of the difficulty of being a single mother while men go off to war, keep score, spill gore – eventually women will learn to say, "Nevermore!"

When Odysseus (tall, imposing Benjamin Shaw) and his crew are invited to supper by the cannibalistic Laestrygonians, he doesn't realize that he and his men are to be the cuisine! In "Men Are on the Menu" their queen (the wonderful and ubiquitous Kaisa Nichols-Russell) and her court sing: "We often use our guests as food; first we toast them, then we roast them; first we baste them, then we taste them."

When Odysseus pleads with Circe (the very convincing Flavia Perrotta) to transform his porcine crew back into men, she sings "Men Are Pigs": "They always fuss, and burp and cuss, and make a mess, and talk BS," she avers, and coyly claims, "I make the outer frame match the inner man."

Cherry creates a teachable moment when he has Odysseus, focused always on reaching Penelope, pretend to be gay to deflect Circe's advances. His first mate (the hilarious Sam Goldstein) is the unwilling pawn in this ruse. Circe obligingly transforms herself into an epebic boy to please the shocked Odysseus.

In the denouement Cherry obligingly omits the slaughter of the suitors, has Odysseus "re-marry" Penelope after winning her hand by stringing his bow and then to legislate the antiquated inheritance laws out of existence.

A second wedding is thrown in when Circe crashes the party with her newfound fiancé Telemachus – Odysseus' son! (the filial yet rebellious Isaac Solomon).

So many other actors deserve kudos but I shall limit myself to mentioning Kaisa Nichols-Russell once more. This enviable young lass plays the Laestrygonian queen (she's a man-eater!), Helen of Troy (the world's most beautiful woman), one of the bewitching Sirens, and one of the deceased queens Odysseus encounters in the underworld – three queens and one mermaid in one night's work!

Congratulations to Kaisa and to the whole talented crew!
