Longer Terms and Term Limits May Be on City Council Horizon

by James Giese

Two possible changes to the city election process may be placed on the community questionnaire to be passed out at the next city election in November. The first proposal would extend council terms from two to four years. The second would limit the number of terms a person could serve on council. Neither was endorsed by city council at its August 7 worksession but members tentatively agreed to submit both as advisory questions on the questionnaire.

Another proposal, to lower the voting age to 16 for city elections, may be referred by council to the Youth Advisory Committee at a regular council meeting, although most councilmembers were skeptical of the idea. An additional proposal to separately elect the mayor was discussed and generally opposed.

It has become customary for the city to make available to voters at each city election a questionnaire asking voters to evaluate various city services and express their views on proposed questions. The results do not bear the weight of a ballot referendum question as many voters do not take the trouble to complete the questionnaire.

Nor can the survey be considered to have the statistical validity of a properly conducted opinion survey. It does, however, represent the views of residents who vote and complete the questionnaire. Earlier, council had proposed including on the survey questionnaire the new pedestrian and bicyclist master plan of paths and trails. City Manager Michael McLaughlin cautioned council that there was only so much space and if questions were added, something else would have had to be deleted. Council agreed to review a draft of the questionnaire later and make decisions then.

Lowered Voting Age

Councilmember Edward Putens noted that the cities of Takoma Park and Austin, Texas, had lowered the voting eligibility from 18 to 16. He noted that while persons of this age could vote, they were not eligible to hold office.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts did not think the change was necessary. He had seen the article about Takoma Park in The Washington Post and had talked with several kids who thought it was a joke.

Councilmember Emmett Jordan said he had talked to Mayor Williams of Takoma Park, who said it had been done to engage younger people in the conduct

Council Expresses Concern For Special Tree Support

by Barbara Hopkins

At its meeting on August 12, the Greenbelt City Council considered several proposals to keep the green in Greenbelt. It agreed to contract with Bartlett Tree Experts to repair a red mulberry tree, a native species considered to be among the city's best, or most significant, trees. The support cable on the tree in Buddy Attick Park has snapped resulting in damage to the tree.

The Public Works staff has already built a sandbag pyramid under a large limb to provide short-term support, as recommended by Bartlett. In the longer term, Bartlett recommends installing three vertical props to support the long low limbs, adding four steel cables to spread the load throughout the tree and using three large brace rods to prevent expansion of an existing split. The work will cost $3,200. ACT Review

The Advisory Committee on Trees reviewed the problem and its proposed solution and concurs with Bartlett's recommendation. The committee suggests this procedure should add another two to three decades of life to the tree.

Ethel Dutky, a committee member, told council this native, now rare, tree is a non-fruiting male specimen so it avoids the mess of berries. It is not the invasive white mulberry (which sometimes bears red fruit). She said she hopes Public Works will propagate the tree from cuttings for people to plant.

Tree Replacement

The committee has recommended to council that a large

Thanks to its apparent popularity as a venue for moviegoers, the Old Greenbelt Theatre has received a $75,000 grant to restore its art deco lobby. At the Greenbelt City Council meeting on Monday, August 12 Mayor Judith Davis accepted a plaque proclaiming the award from Rob Nieweg and Monica Rhodes from the Washington Field Office for the National Trust for Historic Preservation. In turn, Davis presented Nieweg and Rhodes each with a picture of the theater on its opening day in 1938.

American Express and the National Trust for Historic Preservation made an award to the theater and 12 other establishments in the greater Washington, D.C., area through the Partners in Preservation program. The grants were awarded through popular votes from area residents with the Washington National Cathedral winning the most votes to receive $100,000 toward restoring two bays of the vaulted ceiling inside the nave that were damaged in the earthquake of 2011. People could choose among 24 area sites they considered the most deserving of the funding. The voting period ran from April 24 through May 10, 2013.

Over eight million dollars has been awarded in eight major U.S. cities during the eight years of the Partners in Preservation program. Other winners this year include Meridian Hill Park, Congressional Cemetery, the GALA Hispanic Theatre at the Tivoli in Columbia Heights, Mount Vernon and the Sixth & I Historic Synagogue.

Labor Day Festival The Rising Stars to Highlight Young Bands, Dance Groups

by Jon Gardner

On Sunday afternoon at the Labor Day Festival several upand-coming rock bands and two dance groups will take the indoor stage in the Community Center. The Rising Stars program was introduced last year and proved to be a popular way to escape the heat of the day while enjoying the talents of local teenage groups.

Greenbelt's New Chicago Dance Studio Youth Performing Company is new to the Festival this year. YouthCo is directed by Samantha Fitschen and is made up of Elta Goldstein, Elizabeth Gardner and Jamie Rogers-Sites. They perform a variety of jazz, contemporary and music theatre dance. According to Fitschen, "There is something really exciting about our repertory this year; our students had the opportunity to choreograph their own works."

Making Moves Dance Collective has performed at the Labor Day Festival for several years. They are a competitive dance group based in Beltsville. Making Moves provides technical training in jazz, tap, ballet, hip-hop, lyrical and gymnastics, while developing students' confidence, poise and self-esteem.

Two bands which performed in last year's Rising Stars program will return this year. RPG consists of Jan Knutson, David Gardner and Jake Transgrud playing rock from the 70s and 80s. The band formed three years ago and has played at the New Deal Café and Greenbelt Middle School. These Eleanor Roosevelt High School students have added new songs to their repertoire but said, "Just don't ask us what RPG stands for."

Poprocks and Coke is made up of Aaron Goldstein, David Huber and Javier Lopez. They are in the running for the Battle of the Bands Warped Tour '13 and will bring some original songs to the Festival. "We are an alternative rock band from Berwyn Heights that wants to get you hyped up!" says Goldstein.

ASG Meeting Talk On Magnetosphere

The August free meeting of the Astronomical Society of Greenbelt (ASG), on Thursday August 29 at 7:30 p.m. at the Howard B. Owens Science Center, will feature a presentation by NASA scientist, Greenbelter Craig Tooley, discussing studies of the magnetosphere. All are invited.

Tooley is currently the project manager for NASA's inhouse Magnetospheric Multiscale (MMS) mission, which will launch in late 2014 using four identical spacecraft in formation orbiting Earth to make threedimensional measurements of the plasma in the magnetospheric boundary regions. The project that Tooley joined as project manager investigates the fundamental energy transfer process of magnetic reconnection. Earlier he was NASA's project manager for the Joint Polar Satellite System (JPSS) Flight Project that develops the nation's next generation of polar orbiting weather and climate science satellites in partnership with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Tooley has an MS in mechanical engineering from the University of Maryland, after obtaining a BS in mechanical engineering from the University of Evansville, Ind.

The Science Center is at 9601 Greenbelt Road in Lanham adjacent to DuVal High School.

A Review A 17th Century Shocker Plays at the Arts Center

by Jim Link

When you see "'Tis Pity She's a Whore" at the Greenbelt Arts Center - and you should - the first clue you are not entering Disneyland is the Adult Content Warning sheet Dottie Spivack gives you with your program. "Murder and mayhem," "adult sexuality," "incest," "a disembow-eled heart," "stabbings galore" are some of the promised treats.

From the moment of its premiere in 1633, John Ford's grand guignol revenge play was controversial yet won praise and has traction still today. It remains controversial because Ford never overtly condemns the moral depravity he depicts - the good folks don't thrive and the wicked largely go unpunished. It compels praise for soaring language, acute psychological insight into the darker corners of the human heart and fidelity to the ambiguity of human motivation.

Modernized to WWII Italy among mafia families fueled by volcanic tempers and rigid codes of family "honor," the play centers on Giovanni's incestuous love for his sister Annabella. Discovered to be pregnant, she is hastily married off to Don Soranzo, who of course discovers the ruse and triggers a series of violent events grotesquely intended for him to save face, preserve his honor and establish some kind of rough justice.

Always subversive, mischievous and intelligent, the Rude Mechanicals show real courage in staging this very successful production.

Excellent Chemistry

Crucial to the play's success is the excellent sexual chemistry between Lauren Beward (Annabella) and Josh Engel (Giovanni). The honey-tongued Giovanni "reasons" to Annabella that their imminent incest is no worse than the sexual relations of Jupiter/ Juno, the brother/sister king and queen of heaven. "I would not trade this minute for Elysium," he assures Annabella, quelling her lingering doubts. Claiming that he "will suck divine ambrosia from her lips," Giovanni convinces Annabella that they have created their own "paradise of joy."

Another couple with a convincing erotic charge are Hippolita and Vasques. The scheming, soignee Hippolita is played by the most excellent director of the play, Jaki Demarest. She gets directorial help from Paul Davis, who also plays Don Soranzo, and from Josh Engel, the overheated Giovanni. The Rudes are nothing if not team players - the whole cast, it seems, multi-tasks and does yeoman duty in helping each other. The play's the thing! Back to Hippolita/Demarest. Wearing a sleek black dress (thigh-high slit), heels, a black hat with a face-veiling mantilla, she exudes sexual allure, saunters with swagger and is convinced she has seduced Vasques.

He, however, is the loyal tool of Don Soranzo, who has commissioned him to fall into Hippolita's arms. Vasques, Machiavellian to the max, is played brilliantly by Daniel Drouek with fastidious elegance and real menace.

Comic Relief

Desperately needed comic relief is supplied by Melanie Jester and Piper Ochershausen. In a gender-bending role, Jester plays the narcissistic, irrepressible, obtuse Bergetto, who pitches woo to Annabella. Ochershausen, "his" frustrated secretary Poggia, tries valiantly to put a good face on Bergetto's oafishness.

Kate Smith-Morse does triple duty as props mistress, costumer and stage manager. According to Demarest, she "built us some really incredible props, including the disemboweled heart, a thing of gory wonder."

This feast of "the carnal and the charnel" (Demarest again) is not for the squeamish. But it is an energetic, fierce indictment of provincial tribal feuds, familial "honor" killings and ugly domestic violence. Go and see it; just leave the kiddies at home.

of city affairs. The flip side, he said, was that it could lower the percentage of voter participation for city elections because young people in general are less apt to vote.

Mayor Judith Davis, while also skeptical of the idea, thought the question should be referred to the Youth Advisory Committee.

Audience member Bill Orleans urged council to add this proposal to the list of other election issues and consider them all at an advertised public meeting.

Four-Year Terms

Putens took note of an article in the Gazette Newspapers indicating that longer terms for city offices made sense as it would save municipalities the cost of elections and allow elected officials more time to get their promised projects going before reelection is sought. While Putens said he had mixed feelings on the proposal, he noted that with elections every two years, councilmembers really had only about 14 months to settle down and do business.

He also said the city had difficulty attracting candidates. People don't want to go through the expense and hassle of running and attend all the meetings, he added.

Davis noted, however, that if voters make a bad choice, they would be stuck with it for four years. She said that in many cities councilmembers are elected by wards, not at large, and in smaller towns councilmembers are elected with few votes. While she thought it would be nice for her to be elected to fouryear terms, it was not her choice to make. "People want us to go door-to-door" every two years, she said. She proposed putting the proposal as a question on the city's election survey.

History

Councilmember Konrad Herling noted that the proposal had gone to the electorate once before and had been opposed by a 72 percent vote. While he did not have a strong feeling either way, he thought that a longer term might interest more people in running.

Councilmember Leta Mach thought that if this proposal were to go further, it should include a provision enabling voters to recall elected officials, which is not in the city charter. She thought having a regular city election every two years, plus congressional elections in the years in between thereby providing an election than in many municipal elections. He did not understand why a change was needed. He claimed that the referendum 22 years ago helped him get elected, as his opponent had supported the longer term and the proposal "went down in flames."

The possibility of putting the question on the city website for interactive discussion was suggested by Mach, though she was concerned how it would be monitored. McLaughlin said the city had done online surveys before and can control the number of times the same party responds. Jordan thought an online survey would engage a self-selecting group and that a larger sample was needed. Putens thought monitoring a blog would consume staff time and that there was the ability to manipulate responses.

McLaughlin was asked to draft questions for the city's questionnaire.

Mayor Elect

Under the city charter, all candidates run for seven council positions. Those elected choose the mayor, who chairs council meetings and signs some city papers but otherwise has the same responsibilities as other councilmembers.

Putens opened the discussion by declaring that council was not doing its job by electing the mayor. Instead of making a choice, council is simply selecting the top vote-getter in the election. Elected councilmembers should run among themselves, he said, to be selected as mayor and added that the current process causes dissension.

Mach noted that in the first city election, there were 26 candidates for five seats and that the top vote-getter was not selected mayor by the council. "I consider the mayor to be one among equals," she said. A separate election would elevate the position to more than what it is.

Roberts also opposed a separate election, saying it would result in the mayor assuming more duties and cause greater conflict with council. He would support the idea of revolving the mayor position among councilmembers, however.

More Objections

Pope was not opposed to electing a mayor separately but felt there would be trouble getting enough people to run for council. She would like a process for people to say who should be the mayor. TREES continued from page 1

The Red Mulberry Tree located near Greenbelt Lake has been shored up with sandbags by Public Works until Bartlett Tree Services can make permanent repairs.

"Muskogee" crape myrtle available through Public Works might be planted in space left empty by removal of a large white pine on the front side of the Municipal Building. Public Works also has a "Natchez" crape myrtle available that the committee considers a fine future replacement for the large willow oak in front of the Municipal Building. It has been declining for several years. Council approved the committee's recommendations.

Green Team

As part of its intention to become a Sustainable Maryland Certified (SMC) community, Greenbelt must designate a "Green Team" to develop a required action plan. Efforts to recruit members for this team have yielded very low response. Therefore, the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability (GreenACES) has agreed to become the Green Team, an approach approved by SMC representatives.

vote by the council to select the mayor.

Putens noted, however, that divisiveness between sections exists in the present process where some people use bullet votes to strengthen the position of the person they support for mayor to become top vote-getter. (Note: A voter can cast seven votes for seven candidates. However, if the person desires one candidate to be mayor and does not care who else is elected to council, that person can cast only one vote for the favored candidate. By denying votes to six other candidates, the voter is helping his or her candidate become top vote-getter. While some voters do this, analysis of voting results indicate that most voters use all or most of their allotted votes to support multiple candidates.)

GreenACES Chair John Lippert told council the committee would take the role initially to get things started. He said its current focus is the Labor Day Festival. After that, he said, GreenACES will concentrate on sustainability certification.

Lippert offered a vision that GreenACES would serve as a key part of the Green Team but representatives from diverse sectors such as businesses, environmental groups, property managers and city staff also would be represented.

Audience member Lore Rosenthal said she thought the low response had resulted from inviting the wrong people to join the team. She said a letter had been sent to 23 people, mostly heads of homeowners associations and corporations and only five from environmental groups. She offered to submit to council her suggested list of those who should be invited to participate on the team.

Mayor Judith Davis said homeowners associations had been contacted in an effort to solicit members from throughout the city.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts questioned if this sustainability certification was just another "feel good" conservation program of the state, while every day he sees natural areas destroyed in the name of development. He thought if it were really going to do some good, plenty of people in Greenbelt would be "clamoring" to join.

Michael Hartman of Green-ACES commented that Roberts knows personally from creation of the Forest Preserve how effective people can be in bringing about change. He said every city department contains a sustainability aspect and that the idea needs to be incorporated into everything as standard operating procedure. "Then we will make a difference," he said.

Sustainability Certification

Lippert likened sustainability certification to the development of LEED, the "green" building program which has evolved into a viable program affecting the built environment. He sees the SMC designation as a step towards engraining sustainability in public consciousness as something we all have a stake in.

Davis pointed out that the synergy of different groups working together makes things happen. This is what is hoped for, she said.

Councilmember Leta Mach moved that the Green Team consist of members of GreenACES along with other interested individuals to be appointed by council. The motion passed unanimously.

each November, might result in higher voter turnout.

Robert said if it was a bad idea 22 years ago, it still is now. Those who fail to get elected would have to wait four years to try again, he said.

The two newest councilmembers, however, thought the idea had some merit. Councilmember Silke Pope said there was such a quick turnaround for newly elected officials and that, with a recall provision, she thought the idea was worth considering. Jordan said it was a lot of work to get elected and hard to get anything accomplished in two years. He thought the terms could be staggered, permitting elections still to be held every two years.

Roberts noted the elections have been every two years for 75 years. There have always been more candidates than positions and voter turnout has been better Jordan was not comfortable electing the mayor separately but thought Roberts' proposal was interesting.

Davis thought that in some ways running separately for mayor would be easier. There would be fewer opponents, she said. But she thought every council candidate wanted to become mayor and, with a separate mayoral election at the same time as council elections, those who lost in the mayor's contest would not be able to serve on council.

Doing so, Davis thought might bring new people into the election process. On the other hand, a mayor's race might wind up pitting one section of the community against another. If council should choose the mayor by secret ballot, Davis said she fears that would open doors to bargaining on who gets what appointment. There should be an open

Term Limits

Councilmembers spoke against term limits being imposed at the city council level. Although some said there was a need for limits for some offices, they felt this was not true for council positions.

School Resumes At ERHS

by Brighid Willson

No moms. No dads. No grasping an adult hand to cross the threshold. Buses bringing students who need to stoop a bit to exit. Cars arriving with teenage drivers. Bringing themselves. No tears, except perhaps from mom and dad as they watch from afar. It must be a new school year for high-schoolers. No better way to hear about the start to a new school year at Greenbelt's Eleanor Roosevelt High School than to share a student perspective.

From the lips of one new freshman student after her first day at Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) —

The first thing that greets you when you walk into ERHS as the school year begins is noise. When you have spent two years in a school of 200 before coming to this school of thousands, it is especially overwhelming! After making your way into the building and joining the masses, perhaps getting to your first class is the biggest challenge with many similar-looking corridors to navigate. Surprisingly there are no lockers in those halls. But that turns out to be a good thing as they are finally putting in enough lockers to accommodate all students by next week. (You used to have to share in 10th and 11th grade.) Once you get through that first class, the day continues smoothly. The five minutes given to get from class to class helps ease the stress that new students, particularly freshman, may be having about navigating another school year. Teachers, of course, expect you to be prompt and fully participate in lessons from the moment you are seated. With just 50 minutes per class period, so far most are managing. And at that length, the classes are long enough for a good lesson but don't feel so long that they drag on. Before you know it, the school day is over. All in all, the first day at ERHS this year went better than expected, especially since I didn't get any homework.
