Council Initiates Decisions On Gardens, Forest Preserve

by Kathleen Gallagher

Over the last month the Greenbelt Forest Preserve Advisory Board (FPAB) submitted three reports to the city council dealing with the issue of establishing boundaries for the community gardens located within the Greenbelt Forest Preserve. The community gardens were identified in the 2005 Forest Preserve Management and Maintenance Guidelines as one of several existing contingency uses of the woodlands that were essentially inconsistent with the purpose of the preserve but were at the same time historic, important to the community and therefore desirable for the city to protect and maintain.

In order to maintain the physical area set aside for gardens, the guidelines allowed that necessary pruning, removal of trees and selective clearing by the city would be permitted but only to the extent necessary to maintain the limits of the gardens and to remove any canopy obstructing grown and the footprints of some of the gardens may have, too, with little discussion having occurred about what the "limits" of the gardens in fact were or should be; nor was a plan made for city maintenance that would clarify the edge between gardens and preserve. Given the divergent purposes recognized in the guidelines for culturing gardens and trees, it is not surprising that there have been differences of opinion. Over the last couple of years, discussions have occurred among the Greenbelt Garden Club, FPAB and the city council

Saga of Southway Pothole Continues

Are there any Greenbelt drivers who have not yet encountered the pothole on Southway, on the way out of town just south of the BP station? You know, the one that's about the size of Berwyn Heights?

It all started earlier this month with a waterline break, according to City Manager Michael McLaughlin, who addressed the topic at the February 24 regular meeting of the Greenbelt City Council. Although located within the city limits, this portion of Southway is under state maintenance and is the state's responsibility to fix. The Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission (WSSC) fixed the waterline break promptly and has returned at least twice to patch the pothole. Nonetheless, as the hole has continued to expand from the inner lane into the outer lane, Greenbelt's Department of Public Works has taken up arms against it, having twice installed two large steel plates to cover the hole temporarily.

McLaughlin explained that although the waterline was repaired, the ongoing wet weather and the changing temperatures have apparently weakened the roadway, causing the hole to reopen and grow larger. He opined that a longer stretch of warmer, dryer weather than the city has seen so far may be required for a proper repair.

In the meantime, McLaughlin assured council the city was keeping in touch with WSSC and the State Highway Administration. He said, "We're on it every day."

Batten and Ness agree that fund raising this year has been slower than in past years. They believe that this winter's harsh weather might be part of the problem.

Because of school cancellations, the Washington chapter of the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society asked GMS to extend their fund raising drive. As a result, the campaign will continue until Friday, Feb. 28.

"Some schools had to cancel their programs," Ness said, "so we were happy to extend it another week."

Letters

Raw Deal?

This letter is in response to Michael Rall's letter to the editor in the February 20 issue titled "New Deal Raw Deal." Although I serve on the board of directors for the New Deal Café, I disagree with Mr. Rall's assertion that the Café board's firing of the general manager was well thought out or even in compliance with the Café bylaws, exemplified by the fact that the action was not on the executive session agenda.

A group of concerned members, including myself, has provided a letter to the board asking it to respond to several questions regarding this process, including the efforts made to follow the Café personnel policy, bylaws and the amount of deliberation that went into the decision. The letter can be read at www.sites. google.com/site/newdealcafewatch.

Up to this point the board has not been forthcoming in public about this matter, choosing instead to cite confidentiality, since the action was conducted in executive session, even though the person most affected (Mrs. Rutledge) has waived her right to confidentiality.

I hope that the board will provide the membership transparency into the process that led to the general manager's firing, so that the membership can make an informed decision as to whether the board acted properly and with due diligence.

Finally, I want to make it clear that the views I have presented are my own and do not represent those of the New Deal Café Board of Directors.

Last season ended with a turnover-laden state semi-final playoff loss for the Eleanor Roosevelt Lady Raiders' basketball team. But this season the youthful squad - fielding no seniors - is determined to avenge last year's heartache as they have steamrolled to a 20-0 regular season record. Spearheading the impressive performances are junior Tolu Omokore, sophomore Kaila Charles and freshman Octavia Wilson.

Should We Divest From Fossil Fuels?

Divestment is a concrete and actionable step that both individuals and groups can take to affect global change. Come to GCAN's March 5 meeting, 7 to 9:15 p.m.in the Community Center to learn more about divestment and discuss the possibility of starting a fossil-fuel divestment campaign.

The presentation features Matt Grason of Divest D.C. and Pete Murtha and Christine Pendzich of Divest Montgomery County. Although people and governments know urgent action is needed on climate change, retirement investments and government funds are supporting some of the most polluting companies driving climate change, and exerting undue influence over our political system to maintain the fossil fuel status quo. Taking a cue from the anti-Apartheid movement of the 1980s, a movement has sprung to life to convince universities, local and state governments, foundations and individuals to take investments in oil, gas and coal companies out of their portfolios. It turns out that fossil-fuel divestment is very low-risk and could actually improve one's bottom line.

Washington, D.C., is considering fossil fuel divestment legislation and Montgomery County is not far behind. Greenbelt and Prince George's County now have the opportunity to join their neighbors in taking a stand against fossil-fueled climate destruction.

Elizabeth May (Betty) Shifflett died on February 18, 2014. She is survived by her son Dean, daughter-inlaw Paula and grandson Wesley of Gaithersburg, Md.; daughter Dorothy Chrismer, son-in-law Ronald and grandson Jeffrey of Laurel, Md.; and sister Ellen Domchick of Wheaton, Md., as well as 28 nieces and nephews. Betty's parents were Salvatore and Dorothy Gussio, formerly of 62-A Crescent Road. Betty's sister, Ellen, and her brother, the late Carl Gussio were initially raised in Washington, D.C. At the age of 5, in 1937, Betty's family was one of the first families to move to Greenbelt. Betty attended Greenbelt High School and later married Carol Shifflett. Carol and Betty were married on May 19, 1951. In 1952, they bought their first home at 19-G Hillside Road where Betty and Carol raised Dean and Dorothy.

One of Betty's first jobs was working part-time at the doctor's offices of Wodak, Weintraub and Bergman at the Greenbelt Professional Building while Dorothy and Dean were still in elementary and junior high school. In 1978, Betty began a career at the University of Maryland Graduate School Admissions - a career that lasted over 23 years. Some of Betty's hobbies were bowling when Dorothy and Dean were young (and Betty was young). She loved to read books and crocheted for many years. In later years, she enjoyed watching any crime/detective show - CSI was one of her favorites!

Betty and Carol loved to go to Piney Point, Md. The home in Piney Point belonged to her parents, and was Betty and Carol's usual vacation spot. Later they purchased the Piney Point home from her parent's estate. They planned to retire there permanently until cancer took Carol's life in 2003. Carol and Betty were married for 52 years. After Carol's death, she moved to Riderwood Village in Silver Spring in 2004 after living in Greenbelt for nearly 60 years!

Betty is now reunited with her husband, Carol, and many other close friends and family. She was buried next to Carol and her parents at the Greenbelt Cemetery on February 22, 2014.

the state of Maryland, conducting research on runaway slaves. Alan, who graduated in 1979 with a degree in advertising and applied design, began his printing career as the pressman at the University of Maryland Book Center.

"I was a one man press. That was me."

One of his memorable jobs was printing the program of Len Bias. Bias was a University of Maryland basketball forward selected by the Boston Celtics as the second overall pick in the 1986 NBA Draft, who died two days later from cardiac arrhythmia induced by a cocaine overdose.

After leaving Maryland, Haley pursued other careers but kept coming back to the printing press. Today, he works for API, making company tee shirts with logos and attending trade shows. Haley said when Roots was popular the company produced a dozen family reunion tee shirts a month for people, "putting families together again." He said relatives were looking forward to seeing grandma and distant cousins and "making an effort to join together as a family."

In the Greenbelt family, the Film Festival has accepted several of Haley's animated films, said Susan Gervasi, festival executive director. She also said Haley manages one of the projectors during the festival and advises on technical matters where equipment is concerned.

"He is one of our most reliable volunteers," she said. "He loves good films and has a good understanding of what kinds of films Utopia audiences are interested in. Alan is one of the truly nicest people I know."

The Film Festival is a nonprofit project of the Greenbelt Access Television (GATE), the festival's primary sponsor, which Haley joined in 1998. George Kochell, GATE production manager, said Haley is an active board member who is always at the studio putting in extra hours. Kochell said Haley helps in the studio doing shoots, adjusting the lights and cameras and guiding the talent all while covering the evening hours at the studio.

In addition, GATE recently upgraded its equipment and Kochell said Haley has been first in line to take the technology and equipment classes.

All in all, Haley hopes to one day have the films from the festival shown on television or in local theaters outside of Greenbelt.

"People are getting better at making films and pushing the envelope," he said. "However, we are family based. We are not looking for shock value here."

about the program and the school is calling parents to encourage donations.

In its final week, SGA members urged students to donate on what they called "Two Dollar Tuesday." Ness said that the idea behind the promotion is to raise enough money to pay the salaries of two cancer researchers for one week.

"We have so many students that if everyone brings in a little bit," Ness said, "it helps out a lot."

According to the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, students across the nation have raised $233 million for cancer research since the Pennies for Patients campaign began in 1994.

As for the students of GMS, this campaign is just one of the charity projects they have taken on this year. Ness said that she finds these programs as rewarding as the students do.

"I just love giving to the community," Ness said, "and doing any project we can with the SGA."

GMS will be taking donations for Pennies for Patients until Friday. Ness believes that the students get a lot out of giving back. "They love to see what they do impact the community."

scheduled a worksession with FPAB and the Garden Club on February 19. That meeting is reported in another article in this paper. As a result of it, several items were brought to the February 24 regular meeting of the council for action. Mayor Emmett Jordan said Councilmember Judith Davis had asked that these matters be placed on the agenda.

Davis made a complicated motion including the following: that a continuous routine maintenance zone buffer would be established around the gardens at Gardenway, Henry's Hollow and Hamilton Place; that the routine maintenance zone should measure eight feet in depth measured from the outermost garden fencing, except that it would be six feet along the Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) boat yard fence and not extend into GHI property; that there would be no maintenance by the city on GHI property at the Gardenway gardens. She further explained that after the initial clearance and maintenance work, city public works staff (and no one except public works staff) will undertake maintenance twice per year; and while gardeners have access to the buffer area, they may not use it to expand gardens.

Davis commented that FPAB had stipulated a lengthy list of trees that should be saved but council said the list should be limited to significant trees. She said the list had been reduced to four and that councilmembers needed to go and look at them. Public Works Assistant Director Jim Sterling said the four trees have green ribbon tied around them. He said that staff is not in favor of keeping any of these trees since they have various growth problems and would be better reclaimed for garden area or access. He also said that the trees in question would not inhibit staff's ability to start working in the maintenance area.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts stated his belief that considerably more trees may need to be removed near the Hamilton Place gardens in order for the gardens not to be shaded. He said he did not think council should take action on removing trees now but should wait until after boundaries had been established for the gardens. Without boundaries, he said council would be out of compliance with its own ordinance if it authorized removals. He said council was putting the cart before the horse and that it made no sense to try to evaluate the shade impact of trees in February. He also urged that FPAB's recommendations on the trees be seriously considered.

Bob Snyder, chair of FPAB, spoke to say that the board would like to keep the larger of the oak trees but that he did not view preserving the four trees as a stumbling block. Martha Tomecek, chair of the Garden Club, said they were supportive of the eight-foot maintenance zone and wished to continue to be part of the ongoing discussion.

The original motion passed unanimously. A motion regarding the fate of the four trees will be brought forward at the next regular council meeting on March 10, after councilmembers have had time to look at them.

Davis enumerated some of the other issues that have been deferred for future discussion. These topics include the permanent boundaries of the gardens, maintenance beyond the eight-foot clearance area when the gardens are impacted; use of pesticides; the status of the Garden Club's designated access paths and the expansion of gardens and establishment of new gardens. She stressed that only the first steps had been taken at this meeting, with many more to come.

Forest board members, gardeners and city staff gather to discuss Forest Preserve maintenance guidelines.

Forest Board and Gardeners Duke It Out over Maintenance

by Yevgeniy Trapeznikov

Those who attended a meeting of the minds back in mid-July of 2012 could spot striking similarities with the work session last Wednesday. Discontented community gardeners, representatives of the Forest Preserve Advisory Board (FPAB), city staff and councilmembers and a handful of unaffiliated city residents all came together to hear public deliberations pertaining to community gardens.

While two years ago the discussion revolved around the possibility of expansion of the gardens, the session agenda on Wednesday focused on the establishment of the maintenance zone around the gardens to secure their viability.

'City staff is recommending that all vegetation be removed, including trees proposed by FPAB to be retained. The reason is simple - we are establishing a maintenance zone," said Celia Craze, director of Planning and Community Development, defining the agenda of the session.

There are three established areas which Greenbelt's community gardening club has been using since 1937. The gardens are comprised of 20 plots at Gardenway, 23 plots at Hamilton Place and 26 plots at Henry's Hollow, also on Hamilton Place.

Although the gardens have been in place for more than seven decades, their daily survival and maintenance up to now have not involved the city. These have been tough years of futile fights against forest encroachment which now constitutes a serious shade issue cumbers and peppers.

The city is trying to deliver on a seven-year old promise implied in the Management and Maintenance (M&M) Guidelines.

In 2003 the Forest Preserve was established. Next, guidelines defined relationships between the preserve, gardens, cemetery and a few other sites.

'The community gardens remain an integral part of the social structure and cooperative spirit of the city," according to the Guidelines. "While some may find the community gardens unattractive and unkempt, the gardens are part of the fabric of Greenbelt and deserve to be protected, both in area and in operation."

The Contingencies section of the Guidelines contains references to "pruning or removal of vegetation" to protect community gardens "to the extent necessary to maintain the limits of the gardens and to remove any canopy that obstructs the clearstory of the garden area." But such an area has never been defined nor has any maintenance work been carried out.

"The idea is to set a buffer zone that everybody agrees to. This will allow for routine work twice a year to clean out the area," said Craze, who is staff liaison. According to Craze, the staff statement will help delineate zone and maintenance activities conducted in a "predictable and accountable" way.

However during recent meetings, FPAB had approved a recommendation that "the existing garden plot fences should be viewed as the garden boundaries" while the eight-foot maintenance buffer zone should not be considered additional garden space. The Club, however, is opposed to setting any permanent limits at eight feet from the exterior fencing. "While the Garden Club generally agrees with city staff's approach (defining an 8-foot maintenance zone to be kept free of trees and then working out wider buffers where needed to deal with shade issues), we disagree with defining the eight-foot maintenance zone based on current exterior fencing," Martha Tomecek, Club president, wrote in a letter to councilmembers January 28. According to Tomecek, this approach does not take into account that current use of the gardens includes access corridors - the pathways the gardeners use to get to and around garden plots - and several other areas outside of the fencing which the Club identified on a map.

Tomecek also added that existing plot fences were put up after 2000, the last year when gardens had plowing done.

We put the fences as we thought fit at that time. And what some folks want to deem as permanent boundaries were never actually determined so," said Tomecek. Member of the executive committee Bob Trumbull added that existing fences should be considered as artifacts rather than the outcome of any formal decision.

As part of its recommendations, FPAB has initially proposed to spare over 40 trees in different locations within the intended 8-foot buffer. City staff has declined the proposal as devoid of scientific basis or recognized criteria used by FPAB to select trees worthy of protection, with the exception of a large 25-inch willow oak tree which is on the list of the city's 14 significant trees. Councilmember Judith Davis suggested that a few more sizeable trees, at Gardenway and Henry's Hollow, identified in earlier FPAB reports, were flagged.

'What I suggest is to flag the trees and see if they are going to be a problem for maintenance equipment," said Davis

Maps prepared by the Garden Club show how over half of the garden plots at Gardenway do not get the required sunshine.

Plots at Hamilton Place and Henry's Hollow are visibly better. However, those south and southwest of the cemetery at Hamilton Place seem to suffer most from shading. A significant lack of sunshine is experienced by the easternmost plots at Henry's Hollow in the morning and one sixth of the southern part of the westernmost plots are also affected.

All this translates, according to community garden coordinator Lauren Whitaker, into the inability by gardeners to grow vegetables such as tomatoes, cu-

With about 55 trees larger than two inches in diameter to be cut by city maintenance, some gardeners felt that this was not enough.

"The size of the tree is what constitutes the problem. My plot is directly under that (large willow oak). This tree can grow to over 100-foot," said Nikki Prive, a gardener, who was concerned that the fast-growing oak may in a few years completely shade her plots, making gardening impossible.

While council is still to give a final vote on the recommendations, the club seemed content about the progress.

"I think the achievement is that we're hopefully at the starting point of having this maintenance zone as a beginning step. And it seems like everybody is in agreement with that," said Tomecek.

Last Saturday night, February 22, we went to Grover's Corners, N.H. In the Music and Drama (MAD) production of Our Town at NASA Goddard, we travelled not only to New Hampshire but back in time.

Our Town, by Thornton Wilder, is often thought of as pure nostalgia, a wish for an Americana small town of the early 20th century. But the play's strengths – skillfully executed by this production – come not from what they are saying is right in the world, but what they are saying is wrong.

Oh sure, it is beautiful in rural New Hampshire. And life may be good overall, but that doesn't mean people don't have anything to complain about. And their complaints bring the characters to life.

Mrs. Gibbs (Victoria Buckland) is mildly annoyed that her husband fixates on Civil War battlefields. Mrs. Webb (Karen Levay) tells her children to eat breakfast more slowly and not to spend time worrying about how they look. The children complain about homework. Real people have complaints.

So far, this could be my town. I happily settled in for a visit.

But unlike visiting Greenbelt, our visit to Grover's Corners is guided by an affable and omniscient Stage Manager (Randy Barth) who tells us up front that some of our new friends are going to die. That's what people do, he explains; they live, love and die. But even with this warning, the third act is a tearjerker.

Skillful Direction

And yet, for all the sadness, director Jon Gardner skillfully kept his cast away from both the saccharine and macabre. Instead we saw relaxed characters as they painted a portrait of their town. Even the dead people in the third act seemed real.

Gardner, one of the many Greenbelters in the cast and crew, said he had first read Our Town while in college. When he finished it, he decided, "If I ever direct a play, this is the play I will direct." He said he likes the play for its sense of community and the universality of the themes.

Which isn't to say the good folk of Grover's Corners address everything we might face. It is, after all, set in a small, fairly homogenous town at the beginning of the 20th century. Poverty is not mentioned. Women are expected to keep house. Careers are for men. On a lighter note, there's no dealing with snow or school closings. There's no government shut down. None of these characters are debating a sequester or a debt ceiling.

Lelia Moors (Mrs. Soames) comments on the wedding.

This production's strength lies in its ability not to play to the audience but in telling the characters' stories. And we, the audience, find our lives further nourished by seeing how our own stories fit with the stories the actors tell so well.

Show Times

Our Town runs weekends until March 8. Show times are 8 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays and at 2:30 p.m. on Sundays.

There will be a sign language interpretation on Saturday, March 1 and an audio description on Sunday, March 2. Please call if you have requests for other disability accommodations.

A Review On Memory Lane with Come Back to the 5 and Dime

by Jim Link

Then and now; past and present; adolescent dreams and adult regret: Come Back to the 5 and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean disarms the audience with a sweet walk down memory lane, then jolts it with a searing, relentless peeling away of those "facades that we erect in front of our real selves to keep us safe," in the words of director Franklin Akers.

Specifically, a gaggle of teenage girls reunites 20 years after the death of their screen idol James Dean, in a 5 and Dime in McCarthy, Texas, to celebrate and mourn both Dean and their vanished selves. Veterans of life's inevitable ambushes and heartbreak, the still fervent Disciples of James Dean have experienced much but learned nothing – except how to bury their authentic selves under layers of fragile vanity, distorted motives, false morality. Self-deceit is an accomplished art for these girls/ women.

This smooth, professional production now at the Greenbelt Arts Center will make you laugh, wince and even gasp at the shockers near the end. No spoilers here, but you could leave the theater cheerfully humming the McGuire Sisters' "Sincerely," anxious to see "Giant" again while cringing at the savagery we can inflict on each other.

Written by Ed Graczyk, CBTTFAD, JD, JD was a successful Broadway play in 1976 and a successful movie in 1982, directed by Robert Altman with Karen Black, Kathy Bates, Sandy Dennis and Cher.

Akers' very polished cast includes Gaye Negri as Juanita, the 5 and dime's rigid, Jesusobsessed proprietress who has convinced herself that her husband Sidney is a saint. Rachel Gaye Negri (left) as Juanita, Liz Dapo as Sissy and Rachel Duda as Mona.

Duda as Mona is a self-styled Scarlett O'Hara who is convinced that she is the mother of James Dean's son, the titular Jimmy Dean. Holly Trout is excellent as a younger version of Mona, a crafty ingenue.

Elizabeth Dapo is hilarious and touching as Sissy, the exhibitionist, zaftig sexpot who drags her dates to the graveyard for nocturnal make out sessions. Sissy's younger version, Kristin Peck – red dress, blonde tresses – skillfully coerces compliments about her Marilyn Monroe-ish figure from her girlfriends.

Linda Sellner plays Edna Louise, the mother of 6, severely warped by sub-basement low selfesteem until she courageously asserts herself against the wealthy, passive-aggressive, "glamorous" Stella May, played with honeyed waspishness by Rosalie Daelemans.

Then there is Joe, the only male in the cast. Complex, vulnerable, crossdresssing Joe is played very convincingly by Win Britt in his acting debut. You wouldn't believe this guy is a rookie if the program notes didn't say so.

Lastly there is Barbara Lambert, the sleek, mysterious stranger who pulls up to the 5 and Dime in a yellow Porsche . . . the dark stranger nobody recognizes at first

Kudos to Akers, who deftly and frequently switches the action from present to past to present

Holly Trout as Mona (then).

seamlessly. The play unfolds on Sept. 30, 1975, 20 years to the day after Dean fatally crashed his yellow Porsche. As the Disciples recall that ur-tragedy, their adult characters fade into their teen selves. Both Monas (then and now) and both Sissys (then and now) are onstage simultaneously, each darkened and lit up depending on which character is speaking. Akers, lighting designer Jeff Lesniak and lighting technicians Dennis Giblin and John Smallwood pull off this tricky maneuver without a hitch. The characters tease out the ugly truths hidden in the conflicting narratives without distracting the audience at all.

A cornucopia of memorabilia stamps this 5 and Dime with authenticity. Heather Brooks (Props/Set Decorator) has done yeoman (yeowoman?) work in gathering a treasure house of period pieces to awaken our sense of nostalgia.

Producer Andy Negri invites the audience to "tour" the set after the show: Bubble gum ball machines, 5-cent Pepsi, a ceiling fan, 1950's Life and Look magazines, 5-cent Texas postcards, an iconic "Giant" movie poster, an illuminated reproduction of the Last Supper – kitsch or sacred relics? Or both?

CBTTFAD, JD, JD is at the GAC through March 15. Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m., Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. on March 2 and March 9. Final performance is on Saturday, March 15 at 2 p.m.
