Remaining Two Maglev Routes Would Run Through Greenbelt

by James Giese

It's official. The remaining routes to build a new SCMaglev (super-conducting magnetic levitation) rail line are the two alternates that run through the City of Greenbelt. This is the conclusion of the recently released Federal Railway Administration (FRA)-Maryland Department of Transportation (MDOT) Preliminary Alternatives Screening Report January 2018. The two alternatives, J and J1, are proposed to run from the District of Columbia through and under Bladensburg, Lanham, New Carrollton and Greenbelt before emerging somewhere in or north of Greenbelt and somewhat following on either the east or west side of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. A stop is planned at the Baltimore-Washington International Airport and the routes continue on to the maglev's destination in Baltimore.

VOL. 81, No. 11

The only other alternative under consideration is the standard No Build.

This preliminary report is part of an Environmental Impact Study (EIS) being conducted by the MDOT and funded mostly by the U.S. Department of Transportation FRA and partially by private interests, in particular the Baltimore Washington Rapid Rail, LLC. The study, which has many other phases, is not expected to be completed until December

Conclusions

The report concludes that the two Greenbelt routes have the least potential impact on property and the longest tunnel sections (apparently preferred by some review agencies and the public). Neither route intersects existing railway lines nor impacts the National Arboretum or Anacostia Park though both affect the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. Both routes are considered constructable and safe. Both are therefore recommended to be retained and will advance to the draft EIS, and the Alternatives Report will use these two alignments when planning the ancillary facilities to be built. The No Build alternative is carried forward to serve as a baseline.

The report states that as the process continues, alignments will be improved to minimize resource use and the evaluation of alignments will continue throughout the project and be documented in the forthcoming Alternatives Report.

2018 Youth Musical Celebrates Greenbelt's 80th Anniversary

by Carolina Velloso

Rehearsals for the 2018 Greenbelt Youth Musical celebrating the city's 80th anniversary are in full swing. Now in its 18th year, the open-enrollment program invites students from grades 7 to 12 from Greenbelt and surrounding communities to participate in bringing an original musical production to life at the Community Center.

This year's musical is part of the Greenbelt Legacy 80th Anniversary celebration, which began in 2017 and continues throughout this year. Entitled Time Will Tell, the musical tells the story of a Greenbelt teenager who is transported back in time to 1937, the city's first year. She joins the cast of Greenbelt's first youth musical and grapples with her modern notions of gender and equality against those of another period.

The musical was written and will be directed by Chris Cherry, the city's performing arts coordinator. Cherry started the Winter Youth Musical tradition and has written every show since its in-

This year, instead of featuring original music, the show's score will be comprised of popular songs from the 1930s. "Greenbelt had the great fortune to be born in a peak year for American popular music," Cherry said. The show's unique soundtrack has led Cherry to approach some aspects of production differently. "Because the music is so catchy and dancing was such a big part of the social life, we decided to divide the choreography."

The three choreographers working to make the music from the 1930s come alive are Lisa Pellittiere, a dance instructor and choreographer at the Community Center, and students Elizabeth Gardner and Elta Goldstein, who are also acting in the show. "I have been dancing since I was 3 years old and I have been performing in (the winter musical) since I was in seventh grade," said Gardner, a senior at Eleanor Roosevelt High School. "Since

I have been here for so long, (Cherry) asked me to do some of the numbers."

For Gardner, choreographing 1930s music has been a unique but exciting challenge. "The '30s dance style is different. It's fun, and I like the music, but it's different from all the stuff I've done before," she said.

Goldstein, a senior at Parkdale High School, also jumped at the chance to take on a more substantial role in the winter musical after acting in it for several years. "I've been dancing since I was 6 years old. I am a dancer more than anything else," she said. "So I was very eager to be a part of it." Goldstein's main challenge has been finding dance movements that fit all 47 cast members, who have varying levels of dance experience. "It has to be movement simple enough that everyone can do it, but that also fits the theme of the 1930s," she said.

Cherry sees the expanded roles that Gardner and Goldstein have taken on as an opportunity to foster the personal and professional growth of the musical's seasoned participants. "We wanted to make use of their performing talents," Cherry said. "As they are able to do more and have more responsibility, we like to give them that opportunity."

The show will also feature musical direction from Greenbelt resident Stefan Brodd, who's the cantor at First Trinity Lutheran Church in Washington, D.C., and production design from Nicole DeWald, the arts supervisor for the Greenbelt Recreation Department. DeWald and her stagecraft

Dog Park Worksession Leads To More Info and Fewer Sites

by Jill Connor

Council selected three potential locations for the new dog park: Greenbelt Lake dam, Northway Fields and Stream Valley Park, in order of preference. In arriving at its recommendation, the worksession members discussed the current dog park and analyzed the relative merits of the eight locations suggested in the city's survey and one additional location, Stream Valley Park, suggested by Councilmember Leta Mach. As this was a worksession, the three selections will go forward for further study but no decision was made in the meeting. Later in the session, council discussed utilization and management of the park

Community Input

Council had asked the community to contact them with possible alternate locations and Councilmember Silke Pope said, "The survey is still on and anybody can send an email or call the office."

Selected Areas

Even the selected sites had

- Greenbelt Lake dam's list of cons included concerns of noise, privacy and the comfort of nearby homeowners due to the extensive utilization of Buddy Attick Park. There was a concern about the investment the site would represent due to its being the largest area available in the

- Northway Fields concerns centered around accessibility and site preparation. The location is also not as central as some of the other choices.

- The Stream Park's proximity to the stream was a concern for safety and for pet waste entering the stream and polluting Greenbelt Lake. The park does not have convenient piped water and parking is inconvenient. Areas Not Selected

Three locations - Ivy Lane, Lastner Lane and Ridge Road - all had concerns expressed by nearby residents and were discounted as possibilities by council. As a result of this discussion, picking an area further from residences became a factor in the decision.

Three more areas also had deficiencies that removed them from consideration:

- Candy Cane City, the location near the Aquatic & Fitness Center, was dismissed for reasons that included its likely suitability as an offline rain garden in the capital plan.

- The sand volleyball court

Letters to the Editor

Hold Governor Hogan To His Commitment

Recently I received a letter thanking me for contacting Governor Hogan to express my strong opposition to the proposed SC-Maglev project. The letter came from Peter K. Rahn, secretary of the Maryland Department of Transportation. Rahn's letter included statements of special interest to those of us who are SCMaglev opponents.

"It has always been the understanding of the Hogan administration," Rahn declared, "that this proposed project would only use existing rights-of-way intended for these types of purposes and have minimal impacts on those who live and work along the final route should the project come to fruition. Our position in favor of using existing rights-of-way only for this proposed project has not and will never change."

Rahn also stated that the governor and his administration "will continue to stand firmly against any proposed routes that have the potential to harm local communities or affect the quality of life of the citizens along the proposed path. We simply won't allow that to happen."

Hogan has made a commitment and must be held to it. I take that commitment as unconditional because any route advanced for the SCMaglev project has the potential to harm communities and affect the quality of life of citizens. Certainly the proposed routes through Greenbelt have that potential, and our city council has been right to speak out strongly against them on more than one occasion.

If Hogan wants to be a loyal member of the SCMaglev opposition, he is more than welcome. Together with many others, I look forward to his remaining faithful to the commitment he has made to protect our communities and quality of life.

Greenwich Village As Role Model

I have been missing out on most of the discussion here but has Greenwich Village ever come up in the conversation?

In the 50s, a development-onsteroids official in NYC was destroying longtime neighborhoods creating multi-lane highways out of the city. It devastated NYC's tax base by making it easier for companies to move out to the suburbs where rent was cheaper. When the guy took aim at putting a highway through Greenwich Village, the Greenwich Village Society for Historic Preservation was formed (gvshp.org/_gvshp/index.htm).

The rest is history. Who can imagine the 60s and 70s without Greenwich Village?

Greenbelt is already designated a historical community. Can we learn lessons from Greenwich Village? Obviously Elon Musk hasn't; he probably has never heard of Robert Moses.

Plenty of Angst

Angela Alsobrooks, a Prince George's County Executive hopeful, has joined the outcry against the maglev (letter, Feb. 1), as if that could have an effect on maglev construction.

As explained by maglev promoters on January 29 at the New Deal Café, the studies have already been done which inform of a great need for an East Coast maglev. Of course it is not possible to build such a system without impacting some neighborhoods and businesses. If the route were too winding (in order to dodge all critical locations) its length and construction cost would increase and the speed of the train would decrease.

There is plenty of angst about how the maglev would negatively impact our county and our city, but isn't that the same thing we heard before the construction of the Capital Beltway and the Metrorail System from which most of us now benefit?

I keep hearing the argument that, since the maglev will have no stops in our county, we should oppose the construction of it. A whole lot of airplanes pass over our county and city without ever giving a thought to stopping here. And I suspect that the same is true for most of the Canadabound geese.

I do not think that there is anyone who would want the maglev to stop in our county, who would also want to have a major airport constructed here for the maglev to serve.

I oppose increases in transit in general, especially that by private automobile, and especially when that automobile occupies to the point of gridlock all lanes of a highway. I believe that we need to instead get persons planning to be closer to their workplaces, shopping places and families and relatives.

Anger and Brilliance

Old Greenbelt Theatre just keeps the hits comin'. A searing new award-laden movie, Three Billboards Outside of Ebbing, Missouri, joins The Shape of Water this Friday, February 9.

Frances McDormand stars as Mildred Hayes, the angry, grieving mother of her murdered teenage daughter Angela. No arrests have been made several months later; Mildred rents three billboards demanding justice and embarrassing police chief Willoughby (Woody Harrelson) and his racist, dimwitted assistant Dixon (Sam Rockwell).

Irish director/writer Martin McDonagh (In Bruges) elicits brilliant performances from all three protagonists. One critic calls McDormand's effort her best since Fargo.

fordable or accessible to most Maryland families.

On Wednesday, the CEO of Northeast Maglev told the Maryland House Transportation Committee that "ticket prices are expected to be around $1.50 a mile We think it will be a little more expensive than the Amtrak fare."

"A little" is an understatement; let's do the math. It's 39 miles between D.C. and Baltimore. Therefore, a one-way ticket will cost $58.05.

Currently an Amtrak ticket from D.C. to Baltimore is $18, making a Maglev ticket three times more expensive than an Amtrak ticket.

This project as currently proposed is not for average Marylander commuters. As I've spoken to neighbors in the community

Mowatt UMC Begins Celebration of Lent

Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church invites all to join them on February 13 for free pancakes from 5 to 7 p.m. in the Fellowship Hall.

Pancake Day, or Shrove Tuesday, is the traditional feast day before the start of Lent on Ash Wednesday. Lent, the 40 days leading up to Easter, was traditionally a time of fasting. On Shrove Tuesday, Anglo-Saxon Christians went to confession and were 'shriven' (absolved from their sins). The association between pancakes and Shrove Tuesday may have arisen as it permits foods that can't be eaten during Lent, such as butter, eggs and fat, to be used up. The specific custom of Christians eating pancakes on Shrove Tuesday dates to the 16th century.

Mowatt will also share an Ash Wednesday service February 14 at 7 p.m. at the College Park United Methodist Church, 9601 Rhode Island Avenue, College Park. For more information, call Mowatt UMC at 301-474-9410.

Once Upon a Time, Dinosaurs Played in Your Backyard

by Amy Hansen

A bit more than 110 million years ago, dinosaurs skipped through your backyard. They traipsed in the swampy woods and ran across what is now Greenbelt Road.

Maybe you already knew that. Six years ago, Berwyn Heights dinosaur hunter extraordinaire Ray Stanford discovered a nodosaur footprint - "think of them as a four-footed tank," Stanford said. The footprint was in an outcropping of sandstone next to a parking lot at Goddard Space Flight Center, just one dinosaur step away from our houses.

That discovery was all over the news in 2012. Coupled with the fact that the dinosaur park in Laurel is only 15 minutes from here, that means that many of us already knew that we live in what was once a dinosaur stomping ground.

What's new, according to the January 31 article in Scientific Reports, is that the dinosaurs weren't alone.

Stanford, his wife Sheila who works at Goddard, and several trained paleontologists studied the replicated rock for six years. They found a dinosaur parent and baby. They found three-toed dinosaur creatures that were the ancestors of birds. And, most surprisingly, they found mammals.

Martin Lockley, paleontologist with the University of Colorado, Denver, and a co-author on the new paper, stated that: "This is the mother lode of Cretaceous mammal tracks."

He explained,"We're looking at the largest known slab that has mammal tracks on it from anywhere in the world. I know of four or five sites in the whole age of dinosaurs and some of them only have one or two, and here we have approximately 100 footprints on it. It's amazing."

The tracks range from tiny squirrel-sized creatures to "the largest mammal track known," said Lockley. The latter track is about the size of a badger's footprint and clearly shows a five-toed claw.

The other dinosaur tracks include a sauropod, or long-necked plant-eater; small theropods, crow-sized carnivorous dinosaurs closely related to the Velociraptor and Tyrannosaurus rex; and pterosaurs, a group of flying reptiles that included pterodactyls.

Stanford said the footprints were likely made within a few days, possibly a week of each other. Then the area flooded, or there was a mudslide, or some other occurrence which preserved the ancient animals' meeting

The footprints, along with understanding how animals move and a good imagination, create almost time lapse photography for the scientists. The squirrel-like creature sat back on its haunches (this creature earned the name Sederipes goddardensis). Others moved more quickly. Maybe they are tracking their prey or maybe they are running away from predators.

"It's a time machine," Stanford said. "We can look across a few days of activity of these animals and we can picture it. We see the interaction of how they pass in relation to each other. This enables us to look deeply into ancient times on Earth. It's just tremendously exciting."

The replicated footprint stone is staying behind Goddard's gates in the Earth Science Building (#33), so it is not available for the public to see. But a short video with many images is up on Goddard's website: nasa.gov/ feature/goddard/2018/dinosaurage-meets-the-space-age-at-nasagoddard.

Don't wait for the one you can live with, wait for the one you can't live without.

Super Moon Over Greenbelt Impresses Local Stargazers

by Matthew Arbach

Greenbelt resident Mary Murchison-Edwords has a passion for the moon and has been taking pictures of it for the past five years, most recently of the rare super moon seen on the evening of Tuesday, January 30. For her, the moon epitomizes the awesome beauty of nature and she reveled in the "cool and interesting phenomenon," she said, excited to "enjoy it while I can," as this event is infrequent.

A super blue moon is a twofold event. A super moon occurs when the moon is at its closest point in its elliptical orbit of the Earth. This causes it to appear larger than usual. Its designation as a blue moon comes from it being an additional full moon in a calendar month. The next blue moon will occur on March 31.

Although not visible in the eastern U.S., another lunar rarity occurred early the following morning - a total lunar eclipse. In its full display the moon turns red, becoming a blood moon as the Earth occludes the sun's light and causes blue light to scatter, as happens at sunset. Enthusiasts can refer to nasa.gov for a live stream of the eclipse as observed in Pasadena, Calif. A total lunar eclipse will be visible in Greenbelt on January 20 and 21 of 2019, so stargazers should mark their calendars, said Martha Gay of the Astronomical Society of Greenbelt (ASG). "I imagine ASG will do something for it," she added.

When asked what excites observers about the super moon, NASA planetary geologist, geophysicist and geochemist Noah Petro said "the moon is slightly larger and 30 percent brighter, so that makes the moon so much more noticeable." As for an eclipse, he said, "for me what is exciting is that something so familiar in the sky takes on a different appearance. One might assume the moon always looks the same, but when it turns red, boy! That's quite the change!"

Map of potential dog park locations provided by the city survey, plus the additional site suggested during the meeting location was discounted because of the size of the space and the potential noise impact to nearby facilities.

-St. Hugh's playground had issues of size, parking availability, the expense of moving the current playground equipment to another location and potential hazards to the dogs from trees. The impact to the current utilization of the playground by the community was evaluated, although current usage is low. There was no desire by the city to cut down trees and Councilmember Edward Putens noted that representatives from St. Hugh's had expressed concerns.

More Information Needed

The council asked Terri Hruby, the city's acting director of planning and community development, to come back with more information on the three most-likely proposed sites for the new dog park at another meeting. Hruby said she could work on possible designs to better explain how each site may be utilized. She said she will "flesh out some concepts for these locations you have identified and look at options for control and access and costs associated with those." Mayor Emmett Jordan requested information regarding the budget allocations for possible changes to the current park including permitting, access and maintenance.

Dog Park Factors

In addition to considering siting, the meeting considered other factors, including options for better control of who uses the park. Greenbelt's current dog park is restricted to registered dogs whose owners live in Greenbelt. Hruby said there are currently around 100 registered dogs. Enforcement of non-registered dogs as well as non-resident dogs was discussed at length. Many dog owners in the audience and on the council had stories to tell about rule-breaking unregistered dogs and their owners.

Options for limiting access included a dog tag or key fob that would electronically open the locked gates, a coded key pad or open access for anyone.

Hruby and Animal Control officer Lauren Crossed researched dog parks in surrounding municipalities and reported on differences in management, size, amenities and cost of construction. Hruby stated that many local parks do not have resident restrictions, saying "That was common. Most allow resident and non-resident usage."

Enforcement

Reducing usage by non-registered dogs was discussed along with enforcement of the current rules, adding rules and posting them. Crossed explained that an animal control officer visits the park at least once a day in the winter and more frequently during the warmer months. She often stops by in the middle of the day because of her schedule but noted that "especially when it's really hot out they [dog owners] tend to go early mornings or after the sun has gone down."

Kris White, a former Greenbelt Dog Park Association president, explained her recent experiences at the park. "I've gone up there a few times and been the only Greenbelt resident in there at the time There are probably equally as many non-residents going as residents."

White didn't think this was a problem as long as they were registered and would therefore more likely follow the rules. A two-option registration fee for Greenbelt resident and non-resident owners with the resident fee being cheaper drew support. Council members also were in favor of a yearly registration instead of the current one-time registration.

Park Control

Hruby's research indicated that most dog parks were under the parks and recreation department, not the animal control department, as it is in Greenbelt. Jordan said, "It makes sense to me." Hruby also said that the Park and Recreation Department was open to the idea though Animal Control would also necessarily be involved.

Survey Results

There is an ongoing survey online to assess the needs and preferences of the community for the current and proposed dog parks. The preliminary results of the survey were presented and are available on the city's website. Seventy-six percent of the respondents had dogs, only 35 percent use the current park. Cleanliness was the biggest concern for the current park and considered most important feature for a dog park. The survey (which did not include the Stream Valley Park) showed respondents preferred Greenbelt Lake dam, St. Hugh's playground and Northway Fields.

and at their doors, I have yet to meet one person in favor of this unwelcome project in our community.

Governor Hogan and his secretary of transportation want our legislators and the community to embrace this project while ignoring environmental concerns, exorbitant cost and the threat to homeowners' land. They claim that the preferred route, which runs east of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, will result in "zero residential takings" but did admit that the company will need easement agreements with residential property owners.

I am not opposed to improvements to our infrastructure. Having a world-class transportation system is important for our community but not at the expense of our neighborhoods.

SCMaglev: Stay Focused

We would like to thank evervone who attended our event at the Greenbelt Fire Station on January 20. Sponsored by Greenbelt Advocates for Environmental and Social Justice ("Greenbelt Advocates"), the event drew 170 attendees and demonstrated community opposition to the SCMaglev project and the routes that run parallel to the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. We collected 110 letters expressing opposition to the project, which have been mailed to the Maryland Transit Administration (MTA) and elected officials.

On Monday, February 12 there will be a rally in Annapolis on Lawyers Hill from 6 to 8 p.m. Contact us at GreenbeltAdvocates. ESJ@gmail.com if you want information about the rally. Also, we will be holding another event on Saturday, March 3 at the Greenbriar Community Center. We will be running ads in the Greenbelt News Review.

The January 20 event included detailed maps and knowledgeable speakers. Speakers included City Councilmembers Judith Davis and Colin Byrd, County Councilmember Todd Turner, State Delegates Anne Healey and Alonzo Washington, Laurel Mayor Craig Moe, Dennis Brady from Citizens Against SCMaglev (CATS) and Greenbelt's Outstanding Citizen for 2017, Paul Downs. City Councilmembers Rodney Roberts, Leta Mach, Silke Pope and Ed Putens also participated.

We held our event because residents of District 22, which includes Greenbelt, have been left in the dark about this project. As of February 1 there are only two routes that remain under consideration and they both pass through Greenbelt. We support the no build option because this project threatens the environment and our community.

We must stay focused if we are going to stop the SCMaglev project.

Lost Parakeet

On January 25, my very loved parakeet of 9 1/2 years flew from his cage through an opening, after a trip to the vet for medication. I was remiss in putting the plastic guards back into place after cleaning the cage days earlier. His escape occurred right as I was opening my front door! I watched in horror as Cody flew over a row of townhomes, heading toward Greenbelt Road and then disappeared from view. I have been putting up notices all over Greenbelt for days (but without photos of Cody).

He is yellow and green with a good bit of black marks on his wings. He's a very strong flyer, and enjoyed flying all day long in my large living room. But now he was sick and I had to seek medical attention for him and this only adds more stress to the problem. He needs 28 applications by mouth of an antibiotic to get well, and he has had only two doses. I am worried sick, as he is the love of my life - we really do adore one another! He is very intelligent and talks in sentences, as well as being gifted at making animal sounds. Add to that, Cody's so loving and

Trespass

January 26, 3:45 p.m., 6000 block Greenbelt Road. A 59-year-old nonresident woman was arrested and charged with trespass after she was found on the grounds of Beltway Plaza after having been banned from the mall by agents of the property. She was transported to the Department of Corrections for a hearing before a district court commissioner and for the service of two open arrest warrants.

Burglary

January 25, 11:44 a.m., 6100 block Breezewood Drive. A resident inside her kitchen observed a woman wearing a green jumpsuit attempt to force open a window with a knife. Entry was not gained and the woman fled.

January 31, 11:01 a.m., 6100 block Breezewood Court. A man inside his residence heard glass breaking and saw a person attempt to enter the broken bedroom window. When the person saw the resident, he fled.

Vandalism

January 29, 4 a.m., 9200 block Edmonston Road. A woman was asleep when she heard a loud noise and discovered that someone used a car battery to break out her living room window.

Vehicle Crime

Five thefts from vehicles were reported and four occurred after windows were broken to gain access. Handicap placards were taken from two vehicles in the 100 block of Westway, both on January 25. Also on the same date and in the same location, an in-dash radio was removed.

Rear tag Md. 6CY6609 was taken from the 9100 block Edmonston Road. Medical supplies and a registration card were taken from the 7800 block Hanover Parkway.

Fatality

Greenbelt resident Jesse Brent Ezzell was struck and killed on February 5 while crossing southbound Crain Highway (MD-3) in Crofton on foot at 2:01 a.m. The vehicle's driver was not injured. Anne Arundel County police report that neither speed nor alcohol is believed to have contributed.

The Department is offering a reward of up to $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of a suspect in any of the unsolved crimes reported in the blotter.

Black Lives Matter Week Supported by School Board

by Lesley Kash

Greenbelt Middle School seventh and eighth grade art classes are creating logos for the Black Lives Matter movement.

The Prince George's County Board of Education accepted a resolution to encourage teachers and students to participate in the Black Lives Matter (BLM) Week of Action in Schools from February 5 to 10. The resolution passed on February 1, not giving schools much time to plan. However, several of the local schools responded to a query asking what they are doing to fit BLM discussions into their curriculum.

At Greenbelt Elementary School, Principal Dr. Monica Gaines said, "We plan to encourage teachers to have ongoing reflection and conversations about critical issues of social justice when applicable."

At Greenbelt Middle School, Principal Daria Valentine reported that seventh and eighth grade art students are designing logos to convey the goals and messages of the BLM movement. The finished work will be on display in the Black Lives Matter Showcase at Prince George's County Education Association Hall on Friday, February 9 and then in the school hallway after that.

Art teacher Kate Conrad explained, "The art uses simple images to convey ideas with a few words, the way a logo does for a company or organization. I really like what they've created so far, especially since this is only their second week in art class."

The board's resolution acknowledges the BLM movement and its efforts to raise awareness of social justice issues. In support of the teachers and parents nationwide who have joined to proclaim this "week of action, affirmation and solidarity," the board proposes a week of critical reflection and honest conversations around social justice issues.

The Maryland State Educators Association and the Prince George's County Educators Association have also voted to support the Black Lives Matter at School considerations, which was updated following the October open house meeting.

Among them the impact on the Greenbelt designated historic district was found to be medium for the Parkway west route and low for the east route.

For impact on federal lands and parks, the reverse is true – with the east route having more impact. Treated separately is the Patuxent Research Refuge, which the east route crosses while the west route does not. Wetland impacts were medium for the east route and low for the west but for areas within the 100-year floodplain, the east route was low and the west was high impact.

Public Comments

The report summarizes the 1,239 public comments received between April 3 and November 1 of last year. Of these, 41 percent opposed the project, 52 percent were concerned with impact upon property, 31 percent felt that outreach to the public was insufficient and asked for more meetings, and 30 percent were concerned with cost and funding.

The report also notes expressed resident concern from old town Bowie, Bowie State University and Patuxent Research Refuge. Not mentioned are any expressed concerns for the Greenbelt Forest Preserve or the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center.

Coordination Plan

The Public/Agency Coordination Plan summarizes key federal, state and local agencies that are stakeholders and describes their responsibilities. Locally, it includes the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Prince George's County Department of Public Works. The list does not include any municipalities other than Baltimore City.

Also provided is a list of parties to be consulted under the National Historic Preservation Act. Listed for Prince George's County are the Laurel Historical Society, Prince George's County Historical Society and Prince George's County Planning and Zoning. Greenbelt is not listed.
