Economic Goals and Theater Head City Council Agenda

by Kathleen Gallagher

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Following a lengthy series of presentations, proclamations and requests from residents at its September 14 meeting, the Greenbelt City Council moved on to other matters of business. All councilmembers were present except Silke Pope.

Economic Development Goals

The city has been discussing economic development goals and strategies for years. On August 8, council held a worksession to attempt to finalize goals, which would give initial direction to a new staff member who will work with council and staff to further develop policy and plans. Following further review, the council directed that the draft document be posted on the city website, with comments from residents solicited, and placed on the September 24 agenda.

Mayor Emmett Jordan, who had originally drafted the document, noted that the agenda item was titled Economic Development Policy, whereas his intention had been that this simply be a list of

by Adam Glass

Yau-Jong Twu, a physics teacher at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, inaugurated the flipped classroom with her colleague, Dr. Laurent Rigal, in the fall of 2012. Rigal, a native of France, was surprised when he first arrived in America to find that physics was not a required subject for all high school students in the U.S., as it is in his home country. Some high schools had only one physics class of 30 students in a school of 2000. "The vast majority [of high school students] will graduate without having taken one minute of physics in their lives," Rigal said. He views this as unfortunate.

The number of physics students at ERHS is substantial. The school has eight classes of Physics ST and two classes of AP Physics B. Rigal estimates the total number of physics students at from 250 to 260 students.

In the fall of 2012, Twu (pronounced two), who had been teaching AP Physics at ERHS since 1999, started a flipped classroom for her AP Physics B classes. In Twu's classroom, students watched assigned instructional videos the night before. In class she re-capped the material and assigned activities. The point was to free up time to do more student-centered activities. In a flipped physics classroom, Twu could help students with problem-solving, and do a lot more labs.

"Physics problems are difficult. When students do them at home, they can get stuck," Twu said. In a flipped class, she can

by Nora Eckert

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Children, parents and grandparents flocked to a special installment of the Artful Afternoon on Sunday, October 7 that celebrated the 80th anniversary of the first art classes at the Community Center. Participants delighted in printmaking, drawing and stamping projects themed around Greenbelt's rich history in the arts.

Sheila Maffay-Tuthill, the education and volunteer coordinator at the Greenbelt Museum, was enlisted to assist with this special anniversary event. With her help, children learned more about the artwork of Lenore Thomas Straus, the sculptor who crafted the bas reliefs on the Community Center and the Mother and Child statue in Roosevelt Center. Participants used stamps of her work to create their own art pieces.

This event is very special to Maffay-Tuthill because it allows children to "understand the special Greenbelt heritage, with its emphasis on the arts from the very beginning."

The Artful Afternoon also brought in some new young artists in the making from the community. Paisley Mckelvey attended the event for the first time

Scannable Paper Ballots Have Second Tour of Duty

by Kathleen Gallagher

Introduced for the 2016 presidential election, Maryland's voting equipment is making its second appearance for the 2018 primary and general elections. Since it is used both for early voting and in the precincts on Election Day, most Greenbelt voters have probably taken it for a test drive by now. Anyone who has not used it has one more chance this year – either during early voting (October 25 through November 1) or on November 6.

After decades of using the old lever machines, Maryland moved to a touch-screen electronic system at the 2002 gubernatorial election. In 2007, as the electronic system began to age and concerns about the security of electronic voting began to rise in some quarters, the General Assembly passed a law requiring the State Board of Elections to change to a voting system with a voter-verifiable paper ballot. However, the 2008 financial crisis prevented funding from being made available until 2014.

The new system is leased from Election Systems and Software. The voter fills out a paper ballot with a black pen and carries it to an electronic scanner for reading, tabulation and storing, thus establishing a paper trail. Accessible voting alternatives are available, as per the Americans with Disabilities Act.

How It Works

What exactly does the voter have to do? Voters check in and receive a black ballpoint pen and a paper ballot. Voters then select a screened privacy booth and fill out the two-sided paper ballot by

Only One Week Left To Register to Vote

There is less than a month to election day in Maryland. On Tuesday, November 6 voters will go to the polls to cast votes in the 2018 midterm election. Those not already registered to vote have one week left to do so.

To vote on November 6, all Maryland residents who are eligible to vote but are not yet registered, including 17-year-olds who will be 18 years old on or before November 6, must register by 9 p.m. on Tuesday, October 16. Voters can go online to change party affiliation, update their address and request an alternate polling place for the election.

Help spread the word and remind friends, family, neighbors and co-workers that the deadline to register is next Tuesday, October 16. It's important that everyone in the community exercise their right to vote.

Letters to the Editor

Senior Alert: Pepco Scam

Last week a senior Greenbelt resident was scammed by individuals who claimed to work for Pepco. They threatened to turn off her electricity unless she paid for her service. They demanded a cash payment, which she did send, over $600 in cash.

When scammers call to say that you owe money to a utility company or that you won the lotto but have to pay cash to get the money, just hang up the phone and call the utility company. No one has to pay money to get lotto winnings. Especially in cash. The IRS never calls to ask for money. Do not get frazzled. Call the police and report the call.

Opinion vs. Story

The Greenbelt News Review has work to do in order to achieve its stated goal of "cleav[ing] to fairness" (p. 2, October 4) with regard to how it publishes submissions.

When the News Review printed a commentary from a former resident of Greenbelt that offered a historic perspective on pets and chain link fences as a news article, it made a statement about the value of that opinion and the person who wrote it (Non-Human Loved Ones by Sharon Taylor Allemann, October 4). Contrasting Allemann's commentary with that of Abdul Turay (Social Justice in Greenbelt, September 20), we seem to be looking at evidence of unconscious bias. Turay's commentary, which was thoughtful, well written and similarly biographical, was printed as a letter to the editor, even though he, too, is a former resident of Greenbelt who made observations about the current state of the city.

By printing his submission as a letter and Allemann's as an article, the News Review is sending a message to readers that it may not intend – a message that perpetuates the exclusivity of Old Greenbelt rather than promoting inclusivity for the whole city. While Greenbelt has grown tremendously diverse since the 1930s, Old Greenbelt was originally a segregated community. Elevating this past by making everything about it a news article rather than an opinion, and publishing thoughtful alternative opinions about the state of the city as mere opinions, continues the devaluation of people who were originally excluded from the New Deal city and is a form of unconscious bias that needs to be actively addressed. It is not a problem that can be solved overnight. However, the problem of the Allemann and Turay submissions could be. One solution would be for the editorial staff on the News Review to develop a consistent policy of publishing all opinion submissions as Letters to the Editor.

Free Dentistry Day to be Held at Greenway Center

Residents in the Greenbelt community and surrounding areas will have the opportunity to receive certain dental services free at Greenway Center Dentistry on Saturday, October 27.

Dr. Damion Cooper, Dr. Liang Fang and their team will be improving the oral health of the community as part of Free Dentistry Day, a day dedicated to providing free dental care to the growing number of Americans without dental insurance. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, approximately 108 million Americans are living without dental insurance.

"We understand that many people in our community and across the nation haven't been to the dentist for a long period of time. Some don't understand the importance of dental health, but more often than not, they don't have the financial means," said Cooper. "This event is a great opportunity for us to share our time and resources with those less fortunate and give back to the community."

There is increasing evidence that links oral health to overall health and well-being. The signs and symptoms of over 100 medical conditions, including diabetes, HIV/AIDS, Lou Gehrig's disease and oral cancer may first be detected through traditional oral examinations.

"Dental health is a vital part of a person's overall health," said Fang. "Through this event, we hope to educate patients on the importance of dental health and encourage them to adopt an ongoing oral care regimen."

During Free Dentistry Day, a choice of one free cleaning, filling or extraction will be provided per patient on Saturday, October 27 between 8 a.m. and noon at 7499 Greenbelt Road, #22. Patients will be accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis. For more information, call 301-220-0077 or visit FreeDentistryDay.org.

"It's very gratifying to see the impact that events like Free Dentistry Day can have on the life of a person. At the same time we're changing their life, they're changing ours," said Cooper.

Reel & Meal Features Utopia Festival Films

On Monday, October 15 the Reel & Meal at the New Deal film series will feature In the Executioner's Shadow and Thanksgiving Is Insane, as part of the Utopia Film Festival. The films will be followed by a discussion. The program will start at 7 p.m. at the New Deal Café following an optional plant-based buffet served from 6:30 p.m. For those who expect to come for the meal, RSVP to reelandmeal@newdealcafe.com.

American University School of Communication professors Maggie Burnette Stogner and Richard Stack know that capital punishment is not a simple subject, and their documentary film, In the Executioner's Shadow, shows why. It tells the stories of people who have personal experience with the death penalty, from crime victims to a former executioner.

Canadian director Josh Raskin has created a thoughtful 5-minute animation, Thanksgiving Is Insane. The first Thanksgiving in 1621 set the stage for a nation that remains both fascinated and conflicted by its relationship with the country's original residents and its own traditions and history.

Reel and Meal, a monthly vegan meal and film series focused on environmental, social justice and animal rights issues, happens every third Monday of the month at the New Deal Café and is organized by Utopia Film Festival, Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch Group, Green Vegan Networking, and Prince George's County Peace and Justice Coalition.

One of the qualities of a Utopia has to be a society where people care for and are cared about by each other. A Utopia requires participation of the citizens to make wise and better choices for their community. Capital punishment creates a challenging issue for those seeking a better world.

Likewise, our choices for celebrating historical moments may require re-thinking and searching for the true meaning of an historical moment and its impact on our communities. The Utopia Film Festival tries to promote a better type of world – while looking at the challenges which may impede utopian goals. These films will help close this year's Utopia Film Festival and will make suggestions as to how we can help our state move toward the ideal.

For more on this month's Reel and Meal contact reelandmeal@newdealcafe.com or call Frank Gervasi at 301-474-7680. Visit the New Deal Café website at newdealcafe.com/events/reel-and-meal.

Councilmember Judith Davis said there had been a great deal of substantive response from residents who submitted comments, including many good ideas council had not considered or discussed. She said she would make a motion that the goals not be considered tonight but that another worksession be scheduled since there was too much material to be discussed at a regular meeting. Councilmember Colin Byrd seconded the motion.

Jordan responded that he was not in favor of the motion. While there were numerous good ideas in the comments from the public, he thought many of them were on the scale of a full-blown strategic planning project or a visioning session. What he wanted right now, he said, was a set of concise goals for which the staff member to be hired could develop necessary data that would then inform further discussion.

Councilmember Edward Putens agreed with Jordan that it was essential to hire and bring the new person into the conversation and get things started rather than putting it off. Councilmember Leta Mach and Byrd both supported Davis's motion. Councilmember Rodney Roberts, too, agreed that the city should "take the time to do it right."

The residents who came to speak at the meeting were strongly in the corner of holding larger meetings and involving as many residents in the conversation as possible. Jordan asked Davis if he could amend her motion to include scheduling a broader visioning session in January, and she agreed. Resident Bill Duncan encouraged holding the visioning session first. He said the discussion was taking place too much in a vacuum.

"You need the visioning session meeting first," he said, "and the goals should then match the vision."

When the vote was taken, Davis's motion with Jordan's amendment passed unanimously.

Theater Agreement

Cathy Jones, president of the board of the Friends of Greenbelt Theatre (FOGT), and Caitlin McGrath, executive director of the Old Greenbelt Theatre, attended the meeting to express concern about the timing for the renewal of the agreement between the city and FOGT. Their contract expires at the end of December, and they are facing a possible closure for a time because of necessary heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC) work. Jones said they had been told the contract would end unless it had been renegotiated by August 31, and they believe they have done all they can to facilitate that.

Davis asked City Manager Nicole Ard what was holding the agreement up. City Attorney Todd Pounds responded that there were four points that FOGT had not accepted as written, which he had referred back to the city. At this point, he said, they were waiting for the city's response. It was agreed that another closed session should be held as soon as possible to resolve the matter.

Councilmembers assured Jones and McGrath that there was no intention of putting the agreement at risk. Councilmember Roberts added that he continues to be strongly opposed to using a roof-mounted HVAC system.

"We've been there before," he said, speaking of the results of having holes in the roof of buildings at Roosevelt Center, "and this work should not have to negatively affect either the building or the theater's operation."

Fossil Fuels Pledge

At the request of Byrd, an item was added late to the agenda. Representing the Greenbelt Climate Action Network, Kristen Minogue and Lore Rosenthal requested that council agree to send a letter to the city's state delegation encouraging them to support the No New Fossil Fuels in Maryland pledge. The pledge campaign was initiated by the Chesapeake Climate Action Network in July and has since spread throughout the state. The draft letter urges the state delegation to commit to opposing any new expansion of burning dirty fossil fuels, such as coal, oil and gas.

Although she supported the ideas behind the pledge, Davis thought it would be inappropriate for council to send a letter to the delegation asking them to sign a pledge. Byrd's motion to send the letter was supported on a 4-2 vote.

A New Bus

Public Works Director Jim Sterling announced a plan for the city to "move off the county loaners" and purchase its own bus to serve as the Greenbelt Connection. Another piece of equipment, a Bobcat Skid Steer Loader with attachments will also be purchased. The city had budgeted $129,000 in its replacement fund for these purchases this fiscal year. Working through a cooperative purchasing organization called Sourcewell and a Montgomery County contract, the city will be able to buy both items for $126,200.

The Greenbelt Connection service is very well used, Sterling said, with most of the passengers being senior citizens. The city's prior bus was leased from the county. It caught fire in July 2017 and was deemed a total loss. Recently, the city has been using a bus borrowed from Berwyn Heights. The new bus will carry 12 passengers and two wheelchairs. Council unanimously supported the purchases.

Short-Term Rentals

Like other local governments, Greenbelt's council has been concerned for some time with the burgeoning of short-term rentals such as Airbnb that, unlike commercial hotels or rentals, are not well regulated. Prince George's County has now introduced two bills toward this end. Director of Planning Terri Hruby briefed council on the bills.

CB-10-2018 and CB-11-2018 would establish a regulatory framework for short-term rentals. The first ordinance defines short-term rentals and adds them to the zoning code as an allowable residential use; the second establishes the licensing and enforcement structure to legalize those rentals.

The county will request applicants to hold a one-year license and will require documentation that an applicant meets certain criteria, but it will not perform inspections. Similarly, those doing the renting are required to notify neighbors and the municipality of their intention.

The City of Greenbelt would be able to license and inspect short-term rentals since its City Code makes no distinction between long-term and short-term rentals. Davis said she wanted it to be included that a municipality has inspection authority. County Councilmember Todd Turner had added a requirement for hosts to attest that they are in compliance with their homeowners' association or cooperative where relevant, but Davis preferred that to be in writing, too. The county has scheduled a public hearing on CB-10 on Tuesday, October 23 at 10 a.m.

CDBG Application

Council unanimously approved the staff recommendation for its Community Development Block Grant application for Fiscal Year 2020, which will propose resurfacing Breezewood Drive from Cherrywood Terrace to Cherrywood Lane and performing significant base repair and resurfacing at the intersection of Breezewood Drive and Cherrywood Lane, including replacement of curb and gutter.

Free Culinary History Lecture on Thursday

Immigration is a topic much in the news lately and Greenbelt's population has become increasingly diverse over the course of its 80 years. With these thoughts in mind the Greenbelt Museum and city are sponsoring a special lecture by budding food historian Elliot Merker on Thursday, October 18 at 7:30 p.m. in the Community Center. Merker will focus on the study of food history and how it applies to day-to-day lives in the D.C., Maryland and Virginia (DMV) region.

Merker will begin by setting an historic baseline for what is considered American food, then examine the various factors such as technology, trade and immigration that affect food, how it is cooked and how consumers relate to it. Merker has a particular interest in Asian immigration and cuisine and how it has shaped the culinary palate. Finally, he will discuss how these factors have changed day-to-day lives and contribute to the food scene of the DMV.

This event is free and open to the public. All ages are welcome. For more information contact education@greenbeltmuseum.org.

with her daughter Kamia Jeter because she saw it on Facebook and was intrigued. She said they enjoyed the event so much that they want to return to the Community Center for some art classes in the future.

Some children have been enjoying Artful Afternoons for years. A local eighth grader, Mila, said she especially enjoyed the musical side of the events, and is happy she can learn more about Greenbelt while being creative.

"My favorite part of the event is combining history with art," she said.

After the printmaking and stamping concluded, the children and their families excitedly crowded around a shadow puppet show by The Lantern Sisters. The children oohed and aahed as the lights dimmed and the show began, applauding when the artists said they would conclude the show with a few ghost stories in preparation for the Halloween season.

Katherine Fahey, the leader of the puppet show, led the children in song with Twinkle Twinkle, prefacing it by saying "this song reminds me of a time in history when we weren't sure what things were so we imagined what they would be."

Ultimately, this is the spirit that Artful Afternoon encourages – a sense of imagination and wonder combined with an appreciation for history. It's something that brings residents of all ages to the Community Center.

Arts Education Specialist Anne Gardner, who has been helping with Artful Afternoons for about 12 years, says that is her favorite part. "It's fun to see all ages doing art together," she says.

Arts Education Specialist Amanda Larsen helps a packed room of participants make prints from a design based on WPA posters.

Volunteers: The Backbone Of the Pumpkin Festival

by Lauren Moses

Pumpkins, pumpkins, everywhere! It's that time of year, again. The Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival and Walk are scheduled for Friday, October 26 and Saturday, October 27. Carving pumpkins and setting up the trail are just the initial tasks associated with launching this year's festivities.

Behind the Scenes

The Pumpkin Festival is known for its live music, hayrides, pumpkin carving and much, much more. The Walk is where friends and family gather to take a self-guided stroll through nature and observe unique fall designs, costumes and creatively-carved pumpkins.

However, before the festivities begin, there is a lot of hard work behind the scenes to ensure a successful and fun-filled event. In her second year as the festival coordinator, Amy Knesel shared that she began planning the event at the start of June by getting permits from the city. She contacted the Community Center to request that the event be posted in the fall recreation activity guide. And in August, she sat down with the Forest Preserve Advisory Board to go over certain requirements to make sure the environment as well as the residents would be safe.

The North Woods, 200 acres of forest, is the original home for the Greenbelt Pumpkin Walk and there are no plans to change the venue. Melissa Ehrenreich, the previous festival coordinator, said "the Pumpkin Walk is all about getting people out in nature so that they can protect it." Ehrenreich, who calls herself an environmentalist, was the previous coordinator for three years and says volunteers, along with the power of ever-changing nature, allow each year to be a different experience from the year before.

Ehrenreich describes the setup for the Pumpkin Walk as a three-step process that begins with carving the pumpkins. The light from inside the pumpkins is the only source of light on the trail which she describes as a magical glow. Volunteers transport the pumpkins by loading them onto trucks at Roosevelt Center where pumpkin babysitters actually guard the pumpkins overnight. The final step takes place during the morning of the walk. Trucks full of uniquely-carved pumpkins are driven down Northway to where volunteers unload the trucks and set up the trail with the help from the Forest Preserve Advisory Board who, Ehrenreich said, make sure the pumpkins are placed in the appropriate areas.

Volunteers Needed!

"Volunteer, volunteer, volunteer," Knesel urged. Volunteers are the backbone of the festival and they are instrumental in creating a fantastic annual festival.

For the upcoming 30th anniversary of the Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival, Knesel was fortunate enough to secure four different locations for the festival and walk that provide more opportunities for the community to participate. The four locations are: Roosevelt Center (location for the festival), North Woods (location for the walk), Schrom Hills Fall Fest, which includes wheelchair and stroller accessible paths, and Springhill Lake Recreation Center, where parents have the option to drop their children off.

Anyone interested in volunteering may sign up by visiting The Greenbelt Pumpkin Festival facebook page. There are plenty of volunteer roles including, but not limited to, moving pumpkins from the festivals to the walks, setting up jack-o-lanterns on the trail and dressing up in a costume and hiding along the trail. Knesel is also working with Eleanor Roosevelt High School to identify students interested in assisting with face and pumpkin painting, as well as pumpkin carving for the festival at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

While giving back to the community is what Knesel loves about the festival and walk, she credits the work that the community contributes as her favorite part of coordinating the event. She also thanks the Greenbelt Recreation Department for their partnership for all locations and the Chesapeake, Education, Arts and Research Society as well as the Greenbelt Community Foundation.

Senior Citizens Voice Their Concerns at Annual Forum

by Mary Moien

The Senior Citizens Advisory Committee (SCAC) meets every month and all seniors are welcome to attend. But once a year the committee holds an open forum; this year's forum occurred on September 22. Henry Haslinger, SCAC chair, opened the meeting with several dozen Greenbelters in attendance. SCAC members present included Betty Timer, Ronnie Scotkin, Marti Galvin, Elizabeth Kavorkian and Jeannette Grotke. Councilmembers Judith Davis, Leta Mach and Colin Byrd were present as well as Becky Sutfin, the city staff member in charge of senior programs, and George Mathews, representing the police.

Timer led off the program by asking those present to describe what they like about Greenbelt. Responses were numerous, including activities, convenience, greenness, don't need a car, classes, competent and friendly city staff and the Library. The good news morphed into issues that took up the remainder of the meeting. The committee will discuss these issues further and present them to the city council.

Some citizens would like to see the hours expanded for the Greenbelt Connection bus. It was mentioned that seniors can also use county taxis with a 50 percent discount coupon available from the county. Areas needing sidewalks were mentioned, as well as the lack of a dog park in historic Greenbelt. However, there is no agreement on which areas need sidewalks and many don't want a dog park in their backyard. Motorists speeding and going through stop signs were issues raised by several attendees.

Marti Galvin, president of the Greenbelt Golden Age Club, mentioned that people are having difficulty with stairs in and around the Community Center. A dark covering is now on the stairs and it is sometimes difficult to discern the edges of each step. Council members said they would look into it and, already, new stair treads have been placed on the outside steps near the Library. Hopefully, indoor changes will be completed soon.

Carolyn Lambright-Davis from Franklin Park commented on classes available for those in Greenbelt West at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Cathie Brannan brought up a problem with commercial vehicles often parked overnight on Lakeside Drive. Buses also use that street and Westway and it makes driving very difficult. Mathews indicated he will bring it to police attention and have the area checked at night.

Some new issues arose including vehicles that are moving billboards. Are they legal to be parked around town? Another is the use of private homes and condos as Airbnb or short-term rentals. One condo resident indicated she thought an empty unit in her building was being rented out by the night. Davis indicated that these issues are being investigated. First, an owner should contact the condo association and see what the regulations are, but the county is looking into short-term rentals and Greenbelt is following this activity closely.

Other comments involved cable TV wires that are hanging down on the outside of buildings. Utility companies seem to leave them hanging when making changes in a building. It was recommended that people should contact Beverly Palau (bpalau@greenbeltmd.gov) in the city offices for possible assistance.

Each spring, SCAC holds a discussion of issues of interest to all citizens during Greenbelt Day Weekend, called Not for Seniors Only. Sutfin asked that people submit possible topics for 2019's discussion to her at rsutfin@greenbeltmd.gov.

The SCAC meets monthly on the last Tuesday of the month from 3:30 to 5 p.m. in the Senior Lounge in the Community Center. All seniors are invited to attend and participate.

Cedars of Lebanon to Open, Serving Mid-Eastern Cuisine

by Janice Wolf

In the kitchen at Cedars of Lebanon, Rosa (right) chops and preps ingredients for salads and sauces while co-owner and chef-baker Maria looks on. Rosa is an old hand in Karim and Maria's employ, having worked for them for almost nine years.

Authentic Middle Eastern food returns to Roosevelt Center on Friday, October 12 at 3 p.m. with the opening of Cedars of Lebanon at 103 Centerway, in the former Curves space next door to Chef Lou's Desserts. The restaurant will be open for lunch and dinner Tuesday through Thursday, from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. and will offer both full service and carryout. Call ahead for carryout at 301-345-0100.

The new slightly expanded menu, with few or no price increases from the New Deal Café years, includes most of the same Middle Eastern dishes past customers remember, from shawarma and kabobs to braised lamb shank and salmon, and a permanent Lebanese-inspired pizza menu. Some traditional beef or lamb specialties such as kibbeh and kafta kabob will now also be made with chicken, says chef and owner Karim Kmaih, to accommodate customers who prefer not to eat red meat.

Maria Almeida, Karim's wife and co-operator, is also baking her popular desserts, from cakes and mousses to baklava and rice pudding. Traditional Lebanese mountain bread, called marouk or saj bread, will also make a comeback, although not this weekend, added Maria. Since the cooker, or saj (think of an inverted wok) needs to be used outdoors, it is weather-dependent, and will probably appear while the farmer's market is open, or during festivals.

As for the new eatery's name, both said it was Maria's insistence on letting people know it was an ethnic Lebanese restaurant, and the iconic cedar of Lebanon (Cedrus libani) is the country's national emblem and lends a poetic flair to the name. "If it were up to me I'd be fine with Centerway Café 103 or something," says Karim, but Maria prevailed. Can we plant a cedar of Lebanon in the patch of grass in front of the café? No, Karim says, it just wouldn't survive. C. libani is native to the mountainous areas of Lebanon, Syria and Turkey. Lebanon's most famous stand, often called Cedars of God, has been listed as a UNESCO World Heritage site. Little wonder that it's also the emblem on Lebanon's flag.

Prices have not changed much, Karim explained, because having worked as a private chef for Embassy of Lebanon personnel as well as in a local Lebanese restaurant chain and eight years at the New Deal, he understands the value of keeping prices relative to costs on everything from supplies and raw ingredients to rents and what the local market will bear. "I try to keep any necessary increase small, like 25 cents or so," he added.

Friday's will be a soft opening, Karim and Maria clarified, as they train a few former kitchen staff and new hires in the new space. Establishing the rhythm in a new kitchen and dining room setting, and ensuring the new order and payment system works, are key to a good dining experience for patrons. "You have to be prepared for a few inevitable glitches in the beginning," says Karim with a knowing smile. A grand opening with civic leaders is expected in a few weeks.

Free Breast Cancer Support Group

On Tuesday, October 16 from 7 to 9 p.m. Doctors Community Hospital will hold a breast cancer support group for women on the 4th floor of the North Building.

filling in the ovals next to their selections.

In the general election, there is only one ballot for all voters. In the primary elections, voters receive a ballot for their associated political party. Others receive a ballot only for the County School Board election.

Follow the Rules

Voters must be careful to follow the rules lest the scanner reject their ballots:

- Fill in the ovals completely.
- Do not use a check-mark or an "X" to select the oval.

Under-voting is permitted but over-voting will cause the ballot to be rejected. It's not necessary to vote in every race, and it's acceptable to vote for only one or two candidates when the instructions say "vote for up to three." In such cases, when the ballot reaches the scanner, it will ask the voter to confirm their choices. Over-voting (such as filling in four ovals when the limit is three) will cause the scanner to reject the ballot.

In cases of under- or over-voting, the voter may correct and resubmit the ballot.

Do-overs

Voters who make a mistake or have their ballot rejected for errors may get a new one and start over. There is not a formal limit to the number of do-overs, but an election judge may step in and offer to help.

Write-in Votes

While not permitted in primary elections, writing in the name of a candidate who is not listed on the printed ballot is allowed in the general election. Just fill in the oval next to the space that says "write in" at the end of the list for that contest and print the name.

Next Stop: The Scanner

Be sure to check both sides of the ballot before submitting it. Once completed, the voter will take it to a ballot scanner (also referred to as tabulator) and feed it through the machine. If all is well, the scanner will read the ballot, thank the voter and drop the paper ballot into an attached lockbox.

Voters are not given a receipt or copy of their vote to take home. Rather, they witness the capturing of their paper ballot by the machine for storage in case it is needed for an audit or recount. Giving a paper receipt to the voter to take away from the polling place is not considered good election practice because it could enable or even encourage the buying and selling of votes.

Accessibility

An optional touchscreen ballot marker is made available for early voting and on election day to accommodate voters with disabilities. This system lets a voter make selections using an audio headset and a keypad with Braille-embossed navigation buttons. Voters are also able to change the size of the font and the contrast of the screen. The touchscreen ballot marker can also be used with other assistive devices.

Once the voter's selections have been made, the ballot is printed, scanned, counted and stored the same as the ballot filled out by hand.

See It In Action

A video demonstrating how to fill out the ballot and use the scanner can be found on the State Board of Elections website at elections.maryland.gov. Click Voting, then Voting System, then New Voting System – How to Vote.

get them past the sticking point. The students discuss the problems among themselves while solving them, which also leads to better understanding of physics ideas and how to apply them.

Twu likes labs because the students can see the effect of physics principles, she said. It's more real. And in labs, there are uncertainties. If something goes wrong and the demonstration doesn't work, they have to try to figure out why. It is a different kind of practice than problem solving, Twu said.

Twu produced her first instructional videos as summer homework for the students in the ERHS incoming fall 2012 AP Physics B classes. As the school year progressed, she added more videos to keep up with the course progression. In 2012 and 2013, when she was creating new videos, she sometimes made do with four hours of sleep. "Sometimes I had to tell the class, I don't have all the videos for tonight's homework yet – but check the website at 7 p.m."

Twu makes most of her videos at home. She uses markers on paper and simple items: a slinky to demonstrate transverse and longitudinal waves; a waffle iron to demonstrate blackbody radiation; her stove for a video on thermal expansion, and a water faucet and a resin rod to demonstrate static electricity (the attraction between the charged rod and the polar water molecules pulls the stream of water towards the rod, and makes little sprinkles).

One advantage of the flipped classroom is that on Back to School Night, parents often feel that they know Twu and seek her out, because they have heard her voice and seen her face and hands (writing equations) on videos at home.

On her website, twuphysics.org, Twu has posted 550 instructional videos. She knows from a YouTube channel report that they are watched all over the world, with India the most popular location after the United States. New physics teachers have emailed her to say that they have used her videos in their classes, and to thank her. But one place where they are being watched a lot less these days is in Twu's and Rigal's own classes.

Twu had created videos for almost every lesson in AP Physics B, a popular year-long algebra-based college-level physics class. However, in the fall of 2014, the College Board replaced AP Physics B with two new year-long algebra-based courses, AP Physics 1 and AP Physics 2.

ERHS is not offering the new AP Physics courses this year. So the calculus-based AP Physics C is the only AP Physics class that Twu is teaching this year. And while Twu had created some instructional videos for AP Physics C, there are not nearly as many as the hundreds she created for AP Physics B.

Rigal, Twu's partner in teaching the flipped classroom, is teaching Physics ST this year, a required course for the science and technology magnet (STEM) program at ERHS. He doesn't use the videos as a main instruction tool, but he does use video as a review tool for every lesson he covers. "A lot of the students find them very useful," Rigal said.

In addition to teaching physics, Twu is in her third year as the intern coordinator for the STEM program. The research interns spend a half-day working on research projects with scientists at places like the University of Maryland at College Park, NASA Goddard Space Flight Center or the National Institutes of Health, and a half-day in the classroom, for four days a week. With 54 senior interns to supervise and assist, Twu is extremely busy. She hasn't been able to make any new instructional videos in the past two years.

"In a year, I will start to make new videos for AP Physics C," Twu said. Probably not several hundred videos, though; at this point, Twu likes teaching in a partially flipped classroom better. While she isn't using most of her many videos in her day-to-day teaching any more, she is gratified that they are out there available for use by new physics teachers and students in AP Physics 1 and AP Physics 2.

Greenbelters Rally with Other Opponents of the MAGLEV

by William Pitts

On Annapolis Road in Bladensburg, the morning calm was pierced by a sound often heard on D.C. area streets – car horns. However, this past Saturday morning, drivers honked their horns not in frustration, but in solidarity, as they passed Bladensburg Waterfront Park where protesters held signs bearing a slogan that has become increasingly ingrained in the community over the past year: “Stop The Maglev Train.”

Greenbelt Advocates for Environmental and Social Justice, led by Brian and Donna Almquist, joined forces with Citizens Against the SCMaglev to organize the protest, and Greenbelters joined community leaders from Beacon Heights, Linthicum, Woodlawn and other Maryland towns potentially impacted by the controversial superconductor maglev project.

If completed, the revolutionary rail project would transport passengers between Baltimore and Washington in 15 minutes. Questions of how, where and even if the line will be built have been points of controversy for the better part of a year. Residents of the affected towns, including Greenbelt, have cited concerns about their property, the environment and background radiation from the trains’ proposed electromagnetic levitation system, among others.

“This is not a public transportation project,” said Almquist in an interview for the News Review two weeks ago. “This is for the elite traveler. It does not serve the entire socioeconomic spectrum of people in the city, or in Greenbelt or in Maryland.”

But ordinary residents and neighborhood groups weren’t the only ones making up the numbers at the rally. The Greenbelt City Council’s most ardent opponent of the maglev, Colin Byrd, was also present, distributing buttons and flyers alongside the Greenbelt advocates. Also appearing was Jimmy Tarlau, Maryland State Delegate from District 47A.

“I think it’s a bad use of resources,” said Tarlau. “We have a lot of transportation needs in Prince George’s County, and putting all this money into a high speed line . . . is just a real waste.”

“This is a grassroots movement,” said Almquist. “Individually, people have a very small voice, if any. So the more you can organize people . . . their voice becomes bigger, louder, more effective.”

Local TV Station Highlights Award-Winning Teacher

by Emily Top

October 5 was World Teacher's Day. To celebrate, Fox 5 Plus interviewed Greenbelt's own Cortland Jones – author, educator and empowerment speaker – who discussed the importance of showing teachers appreciation for what they do.

Jones, an award-winning educator, highlighted the importance of teacher recognition and appreciation. Whether students or parents show their gratitude through notes, gift cards or by helping around the classroom, Jones emphasized that it's good for the community to take the opportunity to recognize their teachers and show thankfulness in different ways.

This year Jones received a thank you from a past student because another teacher in the building asked students to share a note with a teacher they appreciated. Little acknowledgements like these make a world of difference.

Teachers often receive scrutiny for issues within the school, but "teachers don't overcrowd classrooms, or create the reality of what creates the rising impact of trauma associated with our students we teach," Jones said. The scrutiny associated with these issues and the pressure to always perform optimally may lead to teacher burnout. In spite of the pressures, educators continue to "strive to work to support all student achievements," but should also prioritize self-care and continued professional growth.

Jones spoke highly of the support he has received from the community. He said the community has "gone out of their way" to support him and his initiatives by helping sponsor a book club and giving grant funding to help literacy and student service initiatives.

Still, his take-home message would be for "community stakeholders to rally around the schoolhouse and look at meaningful, practical ways support for teachers can be displayed that aids us in our role and responsibility, so united as a community we can ensure academic excellence is achieved and success occurs consistently."

Jones has been an educator for Prince George's County Public Schools for over 26 years and has spent the past six teaching writing enrichment at Greenbelt

Middle School. He enjoys this work because he can show students "through [his] life and work the direct connection between practicing skills associated with literacy and the opportunities they provide...."

Outside of the classroom, Jones continues to promote literacy. In 2014, he began a literacy initiative at Greenbelt Middle School and has partnered with Books-A-Million to "establish an annual book drive that has provided over 1,000 books since 2014 and $1,000 in funding."

His work to encourage literacy in the area earned him the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Education Award in 2015.

Dr. Daria Valentine, principal at Greenbelt Middle School, spoke highly of Jones. "We're just really lucky to have him on our team ... he's just very versatile," she said.

Greenbelt Youth Film Screens At Three Fall Film Festivals

The short animated film, A Day in the Life of a Pig, by Greenbelt resident and home schooler Hannah Collins, has been accepted at three upcoming film festivals. The film will screen during the Port Shorts Film Festival in Port Douglas, Australia, 9,448 miles from Greenbelt.

Hannah's film will also play at the regional 3rd Annual Boone Film Festival in Boone, N.C., on Thursday, November 1 during the Youth Film Screening at Watauga High School's Ross Auditorium.

A Day in the Life of a Pig will also appear on the big screen at Greenbelt's own Utopia Film Festival on Saturday, October 13 at 11 a.m. during the free Kid's Program, Mr. Geo's Animation, in the Old Greenbelt Theatre.

Hannah completed her film in the GAVA/GATE Animation Class, taught by George Kochell. It will screen in competition for the Young Filmmakers Award from October 24 to 27.

Twenty years in the making, the GAVA/GATE Animation program, led by Kochell, otherwise known as Mister Geo, offers fall and winter classes at the Greenbelt Access Television studio in the Community Center. The short films, lasting an average of 1 to 2 minutes each, are completely made by students, from creating and drawing characters on paper, writing storyboards, coloring and animating their artwork in Adobe Flash to finally adding titles and sound effects, over a 12-week period. Because of their popularity the class offering now includes two home school classes as well as a new adult and older teen class. Email gkochell@yahoo.com for more information.

 Dates and times are those when police were first contacted about incidents.

Robbery

September 28, 6:25 p.m., 9100 block Edmonston Court. A man who used social media to sell a cell phone arranged to meet the buyer at the above location to complete the transaction. The seller showed the buyer the cell phone, at which time the buyer forcibly pulled it from the seller's grasp and fled on foot.

October 3, 8:49 a.m., 6100 block Breezewood Court. A man was a passenger in the vehicle he owns, being driven by an acquaintance. Another vehicle, being driven by the acquaintance's girlfriend, whom the owner also knows, pulled up next to them. The driver and the woman then engaged in a verbal argument that became physical and the girlfriend assaulted the driver, her boyfriend. During the altercation the boyfriend pulled two gold necklaces from the man whose car he was driving and also took his cell phone. The boyfriend and his girlfriend then fled in the girlfriend's vehicle, described as a black BMW 328i bearing Maryland tags. The man who was the passenger in his own car refused medical treatment for minor injuries. The investigation is ongoing.

Assault

September 26, 5:29 p.m., 7500 block Greenbelt Road. A woman and another person were standing outside an office building when a person approached the woman and stated that she wanted to fight her, and began an assault. Both of the two people outside the building refused treatment for minor injuries.

September 27, 12:32 a.m., Mandan Road near Greenbelt Road. A 22-year-old nonresident was arrested and charged with assault, resisting arrest, obstruction and fraud after being stopped for a traffic violation. He could not produce a driver's license and the officer gave him a ride to the 9900 block Good Luck Road to obtain it. Upon arrival, the man attempted to flee on foot. He assaulted the officer and resisted attempts to be placed into custody. He was released to the Department of Corrections pending trial.

Board Proposes Changes To City Election Procedures

by Kathleen Gallagher

Though the hot elections right now might be the 2018 November midterms, that didn't stop the Greenbelt City Council and the Greenbelt Board of Elections getting an early start, at a worksession on September 17, reviewing proposed changes in procedure for the November 2019 city council election.

These changes will require revisions to the city election code. Some involve matters that have needed clarification for years; others are changes that are proposed in response to problems that arose in the course of last year's council election.

Councilmembers Edward Putens and Silke Pope were unable to attend the meeting. Mayor Emmett Jordan arrived about 45 minutes into the meeting and Mayor Pro tem Judith Davis presided until he was present. Board of Elections Chair Pamela Gregory and members Jean Cook, Patricia Evans, Steven Gilbert and Judy Ott were present.

The proposed changes include an extension of the period for early voting; establishment of an authority for the Board of Elections and the city clerk to impose fines for violations of certain requirements; and an expansion of campaign finance reporting requirements. The addition of fines for late filing of these forms, which document donations and expenditures to candidates' campaigns, were also included.

Early Voting Changes

An additional week would be added to the existing schedule for early voting, and the Municipal Building would be added as a polling place on every weekend day during early voting. While the existing code gives only one location for each of two weekends, the revised code would give voters two early voting locations for the second and third weekends.

Electioneering Fines

The current code prohibits electioneering within 150 feet of the entrance to a polling place but does not provide for enforcement of the restriction by election officials. Years ago, the city had problems enforcing this limit, but until last year, there had not been an issue for more than a decade. The city provides candidates with aerial photos of the polling places to indicate where the legal boundaries are. It is the responsibility of the candidate to be sure that the campaign workers observe the city law.

Enforcing the electioneering restrictions can be disruptive and may take election workers away from their other duties. The amended law will require that if a candidate or campaign worker has to be warned more than once, the candidate will have to pay a $100 fee to the city's finance department prior to filing the final financial report.

Campaign Finance Reports

The amended code would expand the definition of what the reporting of donations and expenditures should cover. There is also provision for additional categories so certain types of donations and expenditures can be shown separately.

Three financial reports are required, spaced over the campaign period. For each full or partial business day that a report is late, the amended code would require the candidate to pay a $50 fee. A candidate's name may be removed from the ballot if reports are substantially late and if the board finds that there is purposeful disregard for financial reporting requirements.

The amended code would also provide for the review of the financial reports by the city's Ethics Commission.

According to board members, the intent of the addition of the fees for late filing or refusal to follow electioneering requirements is not to punish people but rather to be a deterrent that will result in compliance with fair election procedures.

An ordinance to amend the code will be introduced at a future council meeting.

Greenbelt Police Officers Place Fourth In Race Testing Endurance and Stamina

by Amy Hansen

- Photos by Jerry Potts

On October 3, Greenbelt police officers lifted chains, carried boats, swam, ran and otherwise raced in the Iron Team Endurance Competition held in Laurel. The event was hosted by the Prince George's County Police Department's Special Operations Division. With a time of just over an hour and a half (1:33:33), Greenbelt's four-person team placed fourth out of 29 teams competing from around the state.

Each of the dozen or so events in the race required strength and endurance, explained George Mathews, public information officer of the Greenbelt Police Department. "The chain weighed well over 200 pounds. You could put it on your shoulders, where it hurt, or you could drag it, which took longer."

This was the first year the Greenbelt team competed. Officers Troy Arnold, Brian Fink, James Bowne and Colin Giardini competed. Tim White acted as coach and team alternate. Placing ahead of Greenbelt were Stafford Township Police Department and SWAT, Anne Arundel County Police Department and SWAT, and the U.S. Naval Academy.

Police, military, fire and federal government agencies are eligible to compete.
