On Saturday, March 23, the Greenbelt Elementary Recorder Ensemble performed as a group and in various duets at the Prince George's County Public Schools Solo and Ensemble Festival, receiving a Superior rating for all their performances. They have been working hard, meeting once a week before school to rehearse with their dedicated music teacher, Kristen Morrison. County Planning Board Defers City Conditions for Mall

by Gary Childs

Why did the Prince George's County Planning Board not consider the conditions Greenbelt City Council set forth for its support of the Beltway Plaza Conceptual Site Plan? On February 11, council voted to support the Beltway Plaza site plan but with conditions that largely dealt with phasing (the order in which various elements take place) of the redevelopment. Conditions set by council also related to housing unit type and number. At its March 11 meeting, council worked with city staff and others to understand the planning board's position and decide how best to move forward.

After the city's communication of its position and conditions to the planning board in February, county technical staff recommended approval of the Beltway Plaza site plan, with conditions. City staff were surprised, however, to discover that council's conditions were not included. When Mayor Emmett Jordan expressed his concern, Molly Porter, Greenbelt community planning staffer, explained that the conditions the city requested are typically considered at a later stage of development, for example in the Preliminary Plan of Subdivision or a Detailed Site Plan. Porter said that the planning board no longer includes such detailed conditions at this stage to avoid generating voluminous documentation. Porter recounted that city

Math + Sunlight = Savings Solar Roof Powers Forward

by Cathie Meetre

Greenbelt Co-op Supermarket and Pharmacy's Rays on the Roof campaign to install a solar roof on the iconic store has hit its stride, topping its initial goal of $400,000. The pledges (which still have to turn into money in the bank – expect news on this soon) are approximately 19 percent in donations and the remainder in pledged investments that are repaid, with interest, on terms of 4 or 7 years at 3 percent interest, or 10 years at 3.25 percent.

Math Facts

Bill Jones, resident mathematician and numerical alchemist, devised the underlying algorithm for the repayment scheme. It works best if the amount invested in each period is balanced because this, one is reliably informed by Jones, will be optimal for repayments. In the limit, as Jones so blithely remarks (sending shudders down the spine of Calculus 1 survivors), this method of repayment approaches (another loaded math word) the outcome of the ordinary amortization tables so well-known to those unfortunately familiar with mortgages.

But the point here is that the current balance between terms could do with a little more in the seven-year pot, so new investors are encouraged to select the 7- or 10-year options.

Keep On Truckin'

Having gained the lofty heights of $400,000, why is the campaign not slowing down?

In a word, the Co-op is still confronted with an element of uncertainty. At this stage no one knows what the bond bill results will be. Co-op representatives have made the presentation to the legislature and the results will appear in due course – perhaps mid to late April. $350k has been requested – but the result could be anything between that

GAIL's Nursery Project Now Revamped and Expanded

by Matthew Arbach

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Greenbelt Assistance in Living Program (GAIL) has expanded its Diaper Baby Mobile Wellness Program, created in 2015, and has renamed it the Greenbelt Nursery Project. Acknowledging the need for further childcare items and parental training, the decision was made this year to revamp everything, said Katherine Farzin, bilingual community outreach coordinator for GAIL. "The goal is to improve the health and well-being of children during the first three years of life by providing parents with infant and toddler essentials."

The new initiative combines a six-week pediatric wellness program for new and expecting parents, monthly wellness assessments, fresh produce and food items, as well as a wide variety of baby items, including diapers, wipes, toys, books, formula, baby food, hygiene products, car seats, pack and plays, baby carriers and strollers.

Residents of Franklin Park Turn Food Scraps to Compost

by Hally Ahearn

On Saturday morning, March 23, a cheerful group of volunteers gathered by a large wooden station across the parking lot from the Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Some came bearing buckets containing their household food scraps.

As the morning turned from cloudy to bright, these contributors, many of them families, prepared to drop their scraps into the station's first bin. The volunteers were ready to turn the compost and welcome two new volunteers to Greenbelt's first municipal project for recycling household food waste.

Lore Rosenthal unlocked the bin, jammed a long-stemmed thermometer into the center of the two-ton pile of layered food scraps and wood chips inside and smiled. Despite the morning chill, the thermometer read 110°F. The compost pile is heated by microbes that raise the temperature as they consume its nutrients. In the layered first bin, this process had already begun.

Volunteers shoveled the contents of the first bin into the second bin, wetting them down in the process. The transfer uses the three-bin station to create compost from food scraps, wood chips and water.

Gathering shovels and pitchforks, Ian Morris, dubbed Iron Man for his prowess with a shovel, showed his cousins Kevin and Karina Morris how a transfer is done. Clouds of steam rose from the hot pile in bin 1 as shovelful fell into bin 2.

Debbie Bustin, Ian's mom, added water to the pile as it grew in bin 2, moisturizing the microbes. "My son and I have been serious recyclers forever," Debbie said. "We participate in

Some Early Local Details Clarified

Spring is here and time to clear off my desk. Here's a note to comment on "Greenbelt Mistory - How the Voice of a Woman . . ." (Greenbelt News Review, December 20, 2018). Apparently, this piece was written under the heading of humor or sarcasm. That said, welcome were the accurate details on the various types of town homes built. Then the narrative drifts into subjects such as dinosaurs and the Loch Ness Monster. Huh?

The author, Lucely Stickler, notes that the town's construction headquarters were located at the Lake. No, they sat in what is now the front lawn of the Community Center. Here is a rarely-seen view, in July of 1936, taken from atop a temporary water tower. Note the homes underway at Ridge and Southway. A busy area!

On a positive note, the photo of the Ashley's, Greenbelt first family enjoying a meal, is superb. Many is the time this scene has been duplicated since 1937.

Pinsky Wrong On P-TECH Bill

Greenbelt's very own State Senator Paul Pinsky (District 22), chair of the Senate Education, Health and Environmental Affairs Committee, recently dismissed a bipartisan bill that would have funded and increased the number of technical and trades education programs in the state. Known as the Maryland Pathways in Technology Early College High School Program (P-TECH), this program is enthusiastically supported by Governor Larry Hogan and a majority of the House of Delegates. Kudos to our district House delegates, Alonzo Washington and Tawanna Gaines, who

Gloria Bell Remains, Transit Begins Its Run

Two great movies play at Old Greenbelt Theatre in the coming week. Well-received Gloria Bell, starring Julianne Moore, continues through the week, interspersed with showings of Transit.

In Transit, past and present are a terrifying blur in this brilliant allegory about loss, trauma, statelessness and historical amnesia. Transit is the latest from the German director Christian Petzold. The film opens in France, where the wail of police sirens is a constant background drone and civilians are routinely rounded up by heavily armed police officers. One of the doomed souls on the run is Georg (Franz Rogowski) – an everyman straight out of a Kafka story. The film uses the occasion of Georg's fraught journey to depict his state of being, the anxious limbo in which he finds himself trapped. Petzold walks the tricky tightrope of being both timeless and timely. The performances of Rogowski and his love interest Marie (Paula Beer) are chillingly good and the ambiguous final shot is near perfect. In Transit, the past is prologue ... and it's devastating.

R, running time 1 hour 41 minutes. In German and French, with English subtitles.

Golden Age Club

by Mary Moien

On March 13, representatives from The Washington Home & Community Hospices shared valuable information about their hospice services by presenting Living Our Lives Like They're Golden. Presenters included Marketing Manager Sherrel Williams-Maison, Bereavement Counselor Margaret Capurso and Volunteer Coordinator Natii Wright. Topics covered included hospice eligibility, hospice services, advance directives and bereavement services.

Eligibility for hospice usually means a person has a terminal diagnosis with a prognosis of six months or less and a desire for no aggressive treatments at the end of life. The goal is to keep a person as happy and pain free as possible by providing support for the patient and the family.

Hospice services can be provided in a person's home or a hospital. The need for an advance directive was emphasized so that it is clear what type of final care a patient desires. The Washington Home provides free grief counseling to community members, including in Greenbelt. They are always looking for volunteers either in a patient's home or in the hospice's offices. More information can be found at thewashingtonhome.org.

Betty Orbison Bailey

On Sunday, March 24, 2019, Betty Jean Orbison Bailey died at the age of 90. She was born on August 19, 1928, in Parkin, Ark., to Wallace and Lettie Fay (Ellis) Orbison. She graduated from Memphis State University in Memphis, Tenn. She retired from the federal government as a computer programmer for the Office of Personnel Management in the Pentagon. Later in life, she earned a master's degree in philosophy from Arkansas State University. She was married to Robert Eugene Bailey for 50 years. They lived in Cherry Valley, Ark., after their retirement until Robert's death.

Mrs. Bailey was one of the early pioneers in the sport of dog agility. She trained and bred hunting dogs while she lived in Arkansas. In recent years, she could be seen volunteering for Cookies at the Bridge in Greenbelt, accompanied by her most recent dog Barney. She loved knitting, bird watching and a good Western. Her life was marked by her scrupulous honesty, her gentle kindness and her abiding faith.

Mrs. Bailey was preceded in death by husband Robert and daughter Patricia Lee Polk. She is survived by her son Robert Eugene Bailey, Jr. of Coronado, Calif., daughter Rev. Fay Lundin (Erik), pastor of College Park United Methodist Church and Mowatt Memorial UMC in Greenbelt, and grandson Timothy Lundin (Tiffany) of Alexandria, Va.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, March 30 at 11 a.m. at Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church, 40 Ridge Road.

George Daffan

George Carmichael Daffan III, a longtime Greenbelt resident, died on Monday, March 25, 2019. He is survived by children Kelly Daffan Ernest, George Daffan IV and Taylor Daffan; five grandchildren, Farrah Bass, Kerri Ernest, Delaney Daffan, Makenzie Daffan and Brooklyn Sheahin; and his lifelong best friend, Lisa Daffan. His son Vincent Daffan predeceased him.

A Celebration of Life will be held at the Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department on Saturday, March 30 from noon to 3 p.m.

as he stated he wanted to study more data for a few years. So our Prince George's County students will have to wait a few more years before they can benefit from the expansion of this much needed program. Future technology, engineering, transportation and infrastructure projects will need trained and skilled workers; careers that will pay as much or more than many so-called white collar government, professional and corporate jobs. The senator would rather resist the governor than support alternative education programs and training for our youth.

The senator did find time, however, to champion a "fluff" bill to rename the University of Maryland University College to become the University Maryland Global Campus. So let's give him credit for being the liberal, politically correct politician, all the while putting on hold some of our state's high school students' future who wish to follow a technology and trades oriented education. Senator Paul Pinsky: wrong on technical education (P-TECH).

the Hot Composting Project as a cool way to recycle our food scraps. At the end of the process, we get finished compost to use on our flowers and herb garden.”

Vince Wilding stepped forward for his turn to shovel. “The work days are fun,” he said. “And this is a faster way to compost than in our backyard. We don’t generate that much food waste.”

Volunteers from the 25 or so participating households have already processed close to 5,000 pounds of food scraps from their households and the New Deal Café since March 2018. Families who join the project are trained in the how-tos and simple science for hot composting. Cold composting, the method used by most backyard composters, is a much slower process.

Members contribute food scraps, help to run the hot compost system and take home valuable finished compost. Excess finished compost is distributed to Greenbelt gardeners, with priority given to those who are low income residents who combat food insecurity by growing their own food.

Why compost?

Nationally, 21 percent of trash trucked to landfills is made up of food waste. As Wilding noted, “The city benefits from the composting project by not having to have trash pickup for the amount of food waste we have turned into compost. The less people just throw away, the more money the city will save.”

Greenbelt Park Seeks Volunteers

Greenbelt Park has many upcoming volunteer and stewardship opportunities.

On Saturday, April 6, the park will host the Potomac Watershed Cleanup. Participants meet at the Sweetgum Picnic Area at 8:45 a.m. The park will provide gloves and bags. Pre-registration is required. Go to nps.gov/gree and hit the link Potomac Watershed cleanup or visit eventbrite.com/e/2019-potomac-watershed-cleanup-at-greenbelt-park-registration-56644570435.

Also on Saturday, April 6 will be Invasive Plant Removal, for which participants meet at the Sweetgum Picnic Area at 11 a.m. on the first Saturday of each month. Call 301-344-3944 and sign up so the park has a good estimate of volunteers.

Later in April, the first Greenbelt Park Volunteer Trail Crew Day will occur on Saturday, April 27 from 8:45 a.m. until noon. Participants meet at the Sweetgum Picnic Area and disperse to different areas of the park to help with a variety of projects from trail maintenance and campground cleanup to invasive plant removal. A sign-up link for the general public will be on the website soon. The park is working with the Student Conservation Association Volunteer Day for the April 27 event. Students can sign up through SCA via an Event Brite link, earthdaygreenbeltpark.eventbrite.com.

For all events, wear proper clothes and shoes for working on the trails. Have fun in the outdoors and help make a difference for the nine miles of Greenbelt Park trail system.

In addition to the financial savings, composting food waste is a vital response to climate change. Compressed in a landfill, food scraps decompose in the absence of oxygen and release methane, a potent greenhouse gas. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that emissions from landfills are the third largest source of methane emissions in the U.S.

When correctly composted, in the presence of oxygen and moisture in the hot composting system, food scraps are transformed into a crumbly, earth-scented organic material called humus. Adding humus to lawn and garden soil makes grass, flowers, shrubs, vegetables and trees healthier and more resilient. This resiliency comes from the ability of humus to store nutrients, water and beneficial microbes in the soil. Overall, it results in healthier lawns and gardens, reduces the need for watering and helps to clean the waterways.

The hot compost project is sponsored by Greenbelt’s Zero Waste Circle, in collaboration with the Public Works Department who provide wood chips and who built and carefully maintain the hot compost station.

Hally Ahearn is a member of Greenbelt Zero Waste Circle (a subgroup of GreenACES, the environmental advisory group to the city council).

Callery (Bradford) Pears: How This Beauty Became a Beast

by Jason Martin

AGING CALLERY (BRADFORD) PEAR TREES

Greenbelt is a unique place to live for many reasons, one being the tree canopy that covers 62 percent of the city. These trees provide numerous aesthetic and environmental benefits that give residents a sense of place, comfort and safety. A large part of this urban tree canopy are street trees maintained by the city Department of Public Works.

Recently, the city approved the Greenbelt Urban Forest Master Plan (available at greenbeltmd.gov/public_works), which states that 28 percent of Greenbelt’s street trees are Callery (Bradford) pears. It is the dominant tree on many municipal streets and in many residents’ yards. Unfortunately, behind the beauty of spring flowers, summer shade and fall foliage that this popular tree provides, is a beast that spreads ecological degradation and becomes a public safety hazard.

In 1908, it was discovered that the Callery pear was resistant to fire-blight, a bacterial disease devastating agricultural pears in the United States. Because of this, the Callery pear was used as a rootstock for agricultural pears to create a fire-blight resistant crop. Seed that was collected as part of an expedition to China in 1916 ended up in nearby Glenn Dale. It wasn’t until the 1950s that John L. Creech, a horticulturalist at Glenn Dale, noticed a specimen that stood out from the rest of the Callery pears grown at that location. He selected this specimen for mass production, naming it Bradford. After a successful trial planting was conducted in University Park in 1954, Creech released cuttings of the Bradford Pear to the nursery trade in 1960. It was an aesthetically pleasing tree that was propagated in large numbers and planted in many yards and towns across the country from 1960 into the 1990s.

Since the 1990s, the Bradford Pear’s less appealing qualities have come to light. The Bradford Pear is sterile and does not produce fruit as long as it does not cross-pollinate with another Callery pear cultivar. But professional nurseries have created numerous other cultivars of the Callery pear that are commonly used in the urban and suburban landscape. Cross-pollination is inevitable and has resulted in Callery pear cultivars producing viable fruit. Birds and other wildlife eat this fruit and spread the seeds across the landscape where they grow to form dense, impenetrable stands of this prolific plant that crowd out native plants. Callery pears are a particular problem in open meadow areas and forest edges, causing it to be designated as an invasive plant species in Maryland.

The Callery pear is not only an ecological concern, but it has also become a public safety concern. The wide canopy of the Callery pear is due to the profuse growth of its limbs, which join the main trunk at a V-shape. This creates a weak joint that starts to give way as the limb grows larger and heavier, or as snow and ice collect on the limbs during winter storms. The result is large heavy limbs spontaneously breaking and falling on parked cars and potentially pedestrians.

Jason Martin is the city environmental coordinator.

Council: Tree Cutting, Pool Upkeep, Low Voltage Licenses

by Gary Childs

Is the Public Works Department cutting too many trees along Lakecrest Drive? How might legislation being proposed in Annapolis make music festivals and other events such as the Labor Day Festival more expensive? The Greenbelt City Council discussed these and other issues at its March 11 meeting.

Trees

Councilmember Colin Byrd requested that council discuss the trees on Lakecrest Drive because a Greenbelt resident had expressed concern to him that it seemed as though all the trees in that location were being cut down. Byrd wanted Public Works to reconsider its tree-cutting activities and look at other options such as cutting fewer trees and planting initially larger new trees in places where the old trees absolutely needed to be cut.

Greenbelt Director of Public Works James Sterling attended the meeting in order to discuss the issue with council. Sterling explained that the trees being cut were mostly Callery (Bradford) pears which at one time, several decades ago, were a very popular tree for municipalities to plant because of their full and attractive white blossoms in spring and the colorful leaves in the fall. Since their introduction, many negative aspects of the tree have become apparent such as the tendency of larger branches, due to their growth habit, to break off and cause, or risk, property damage or personal injury. Also, Bradford pear trees have a strong tendency to spread and grow in places where they are not wanted. (See article, page 6.) Councilmember Silke Pope raised the issue about trees growing into powerlines. Sterling said that the new trees are bred to grow smaller and won't reach the same height. Councilmember Leta Mach commented that sometimes trees need to be cut because a thick canopy of tree foliage can make a public sidewalk dark and insecure-feeling for pedestrians. Councilmember Edward Putens said that the entire process is tied to Greenbelt's Tree Master Plan. Sterling agreed and said that he should make an effort to advertise the Master Plan so that Greenbelt residents can see Public Works' long-term intentions and goals. Sterling said that the trees on Lakecrest, as well as in other parts of Greenbelt have been a long-running issue. Sterling also said that half of the Bradford pears in Greenbelt have been bolted together in an attempt to mitigate property damage and personal injury. Those trees, and others, will eventually need to be taken down.

Legislative Issues

Council also discussed a number of state legislative issues being considered in Annapolis. From time to time council considers county, state and sometimes federal legislation and communicates its position to the Maryland Municipal League that represents municipalities in Maryland. For example, council voted its opposition to senate bill SB478/house bill HB1317 that deals with vehicle property tax. Under current law, vehicles that are part of a car dealership's inventory receive a 50 percent tax credit, but this proposed legislation would increase the personal property tax credit for vehicles to 100 percent. It would also grant this credit retroactively to July 1, 2016. If passed, the legislation would require Greenbelt to refund an estimated $285,000 for Fiscal Year 2017 to Fiscal Year 2019 plus cause an additional yearly expense of $95,000. Council also looked at HB560, sponsored by Delegate Anne Healey, which would establish statewide standards for traffic calming devices. Council voted to support passage of this bill.

Another bill being considered, HB905, received lively and vigorous opposition from several Greenbelt residents who attended the meeting. The bill would establish a low voltage electrician license and education requirements for these electricians. A low voltage electrician would handle the sorts of wiring done for sound systems such as are used in musical performances. Frank Kruger, representing the Friends of the New Deal Café, and other Greenbelt residents said that if passed, the cost of hiring specially trained and licensed low voltage electricians would cause costs of music performances and festivals to sky-rocket to the point of being prohibitive. Kruger said that the connecting of microphones, done now by volunteers with experience and knowledge of such wiring, would have to be done by these specialized electricians that this proposed bill would establish. Council voted to oppose the bill, but councilmembers asked for more information about the proposal.

Pool Maintenance

Joe McNeal, assistant director of facilities for Greenbelt Recreation, explained the proposed maintenance for the outdoor zero-depth beach entrance pool at the Aquatic & Fitness Center. McNeal said that a new white coat, a plaster-like material, needs to be spread on the exposed surface (that part that comes in contact with the water). This white coat typically lasts eight to 10 years and the time has come for the pool to receive this treatment, last done in 2011. McNeal said that of the four bids received for the work to be done, the lowest was provided by Wilcoxon Construction Incorporated (WCI) for $57,945. In its FY 2019 budget the city budgeted $54,600 in the Capital Projects Fund for this purpose and though the budgeted amount is $3,345 less than the budget, the Capital Projects Fund has extra funds to make up the difference.

In the past, the city has made use of WCI many times for white coat work at both the indoor and the outdoor pool and is familiar with their level of workmanship, professionalism and customer service. McNeal said that the city hopes the work will be completed by May 10 to allow time for inspection and approval of the work prior to opening the outdoor pool on Memorial Day weekend. Pope asked McNeal if a particular lifeguard chair will be replaced and he said it would. When Mayor Emmett Jordan asked if other improvements were being planned, McNeal said that the budget allowed only for the white coat pool project.

Psmith: Plotters and Poets Take to the MAD Stage

by Melissa Sites

Leave it to Psmith, the MAD Music and Drama Club 2019 spring show, is a fast-paced comedy set in the easy-breezy 1920s Britain of P.G. Wodehouse, a writer most famous for his stories about the air-headed toff Bertie Wooster and his genius butler Jeeves. This play is a reworked version of Wodehouse's 1923 novel, written by Ian Hay along with the novelist himself.

The play, in three acts, follows the adventures of two main characters: Freddie, the cash-deprived youngest son of a wealthy family, and Psmith, a benign and clever schemer whom Freddie hires to solve his money woes. Freddie is heir to 5,000 pounds, which he needs because his prospective father-in-law won't let him marry his girlfriend Phyllis unless he buys into the family jam factory. Psmith and Freddie work through a convoluted plot involving the theft of a fantastic diamond necklace, just inherited by Freddie's step-mother Lady Middlewick – who happens to be in control of Freddie's inheritance.

Director Jon Gardner has brought together a talented cast of 18, putting just the right actors into each role, and encouraging them to have fun while presenting a relaxed and entertaining show. As Freddie, James Olsen is free-wheeling and active, moving gracefully through the world of Blandings Castle while delivering his wordy speeches with ease and eloquence. MAD veteran Randy Barth brings confidence and aplomb to the role of Psmith, as he devises ever-evolving plans for Freddie while attempting to catch the eye of the intelligent librarian, Eve Halliday, played with charm and magnetism by Millie Tansill.

Poets and thieves thicken the plot with rollicking humor. An American poet, Ralston McTodd, is brought to life with great gusto by George Tansill, while Sarah Nechamen delivers dreamy raptures about fairies as poet Aileen Peavey. Lady Middlewick (Courtney Ritz) is overjoyed by the prospect of hearing McTodd's poem Mud, while Psmith can't get past the absurdity of the very first line, "across the pale parabola of joy." All this uproar offends the sense of order of officious and suspicious house secretary Baxter, skillfully played by Jim Pasquale.

The producers (Susan Breon, Alethia Young and Eliot Malumuth) not only emerged triumphant from the government shutdown that loomed over preparations for the show, but also overcame the challenges of the Rec Center by reconfiguring the stage along the length of the room. The set, which represented the drawing room and balcony at Blandings Castle, was ingeniously transformed into an Underground station, a London club (presided over by cheeky and sardonic hat check girl, Suzanne Smith) and a cottage with an impressive fireplace. Costumes were beautifully designed to convey the glamorous life of the 1920s among the privileged class at Blandings Castle.

The cabaret, beginning a little after 7 p.m., sets a classy, jazzy mood for the evening, with ac-

by Robert Goldberg-Strassler

Residents of Greenbelt are invited to join the first HUG Walk (Help Unite Greenbelt) this Sunday, March 31 (rain date on April 7).

People of all ages, backgrounds, abilities, ethnicities, beliefs and faiths will walk together in a public demonstration of unity and community strength. There is no cost to be a part of the HUG Walk except the energy and spirit of each individual joining in with their neighbors from across the city.

The HUG Walk will begin in Greenbelt Station. Parking will be made available by Beltway Plaza in the lot next to the Shell station on Cherrywood Lane. The walk will wind past Franklin Park, Buddy Attick Lake Park, the Roosevelt Center, Greenbriar and Windsor Green. Participants may join along the way until the walk concludes at Schrom Hills Park across from Hunting Ridge.

The HUG Walk was conceived as an antidote to the ongoing divisiveness experienced in the country. RUAK (Random Unselfish Acts of Kindness) is organizing the walk. Co-sponsors, which can be seen listed in a separate ad in this week's News Review, come from many community organizations and the city council.

All Greenbelters are invited to participate in the HUG Walk in whatever way they choose. Join as a walker or cheer on your neighbors as they walk through your neighborhood. Show your city pride by wearing Greenbelt apparel such as a Greenbelt is Great shirt, a Greenbelt sports team uniform or other item.

Non-perishable food items can be dropped off at each join-in location for the Greenbelt Food Pantry. The Greenbelt Connection will provide shuttle service from each of the join-in locations as needed. Police officers will assist in street crossings.

Middle school and high school students can earn community service hours by helping. If interested in volunteering, contact spreadruak@gmail.com.

Following the walk, participants are encouraged to share their experiences, pictures and stories with the News Review or spreadruak@gmail.com.

HUG Walk schedule

1 p.m. - Gather at the Indian Creek Trail Bridge across from the Shell Station on Cherrywood Lane.

1:30 p.m. - Walk begins.

1861 Martenet Map Provides Detail for Six County Towns

by James Giese

This is the Laurel insert of the 1861 Martenet map. Extending north-west from the Baltimore-Washington Turnpike (lower right) was Laurel's Main Street. It ended at the mill and factories of the Tiffany Company. Many of the factory workers lived in 50 two-story stone and brick tenement style houses along Main Street owned by the company. A block off Main Street was the Tiffany residence, now the site of St. Vincent Pallotti High School.

This is the fourth of a series of five articles about historic roads in the Greenbelt area. The primary sources for information for these articles are internet accessible maps at the Library of Congress website: a circa 1861 map, Martenet's Map of Prince George's County by Simon J. Martenet, C.E., loc.gov/resource/g3843p.la000302/; and county and Vansville District maps found in an 1878 Atlas of Prince George's County and also in an 1879 Atlas of fifteen miles around Washington, including the county of Montgomery, Maryland, both by G. M. Hopkins, C.E., loc.gov/resource/g3850m.gct00186/?st=gallery.

Inserts

The 1861 Martenet's Map of Prince George's County had inserts for six towns. Detailed street plans were provided for Bladensburg, Laurel, Upper Marlboro, Piscataway, Woodville (now Aquasco) and Nottingham. All but Laurel were port towns where steamboats could dock to unload supplies and pick up tobacco and other crops. When the rivers silted in and steamboats could no longer reach the river communities of Piscataway, Woodville and Nottingham, they lost their importance. Upper Marlboro never was a large town but survived as the county seat of government. The turnpike enabled Bladensburg to switch from river boat trade to commerce between Baltimore and Washington.

Bladensburg

At the west end of Bladensburg, the insert map shows a Y intersection that is now the Peace Cross intersection. The road heading southwest was the road to the City of Washington, Bladensburg Road. Water Street (now Baltimore Boulevard) went to the north and became the Washington Baltimore Turnpike (now Alt. US-1). Market Street went to the east and connected to other road segments that became Annapolis Road (Md. 450) and Landover Road (Md. 202). On the insert map Market Street is shown to the east only to its intersection with North Street, which we know as Edmonston Road.

South of the intersection Bladensburg Road crossed the Anacostia River on a bridge. The Battle of Bladensburg mostly took place in 1816 at that bridge and on the Washington side. The British Army had come by boat up the Patuxent River and landed near Upper Marlboro, capturing the town. The army then proceeded on a road that followed the Anacostia River north to Bladensburg, so that they would be able to wade across, if necessary. The army did not attempt to cross the river on bridges nearer Washington city, fearing those bridges would be destroyed (They weren't).

At the river crossing and on Bladensburg Road, the army encountered a hastily put together group of Americans consisting of a few military units and local militia. Upon defeating that poorly organized army, the British marched on to capture Washington, burning the Capitol and White House, thereby getting even for an 1813 capture and burning of Toronto by U.S. forces.

After the raid, the Brits returned to Bladensburg and took the series of road segments that is now Landover-Marlboro Road back to Upper Marlboro and their ships. The British then sailed up the Chesapeake Bay and unsuccessfully attacked Baltimore. And we got the Star-Spangled Banner as our National Anthem.

The Bladensburg map insert identifies the locations of the Episcopal church and school, Dr. Magruder's Office, the firm of Hill and Duckett, B.T. Duckett's store and post office, the Hopkins and Company store and a blacksmith shop on Market Street. Along Water Street were the Wallace store, the Methodist Church, Dr. Keitch, J. S. Suit tavern, F Gash cabinet, a shoemaker, Spa Spring and Misses Keitch and Lyons Female Academy. On the Washington side of the Anacostia was a toll gate for the bridge and a mill.

The B&O Railroad Washington Branch went to the west of Bladensburg. In 1878, the B&O Point Lookout Branch crossed Market Street just east of Water Street.

Laurel

Although unnamed, the 1861 map insert shows Laurel's Main Street from the railroad depot west and up the hill to a mill on the Patuxent River, the Laurel Factory and Tiffany and Company. Tiffany owned most of the west end of the street, including workers' houses along both sides. The mill site is now the Laurel Municipal Pool and the Laurel Historical Society is in one of the worker houses.

A short block south of Main Street on Assembly Street was the George P. Tiffany residence, situated on a large parcel of land. Across the street on one side was St. Mary of the Mill Catholic Church, dating to 1843. On the other side, across what is now Ninth Street, were a Methodist church and a school house. The Tiffany house site is now St. Vincent Pallotti High School.

According to the Wikipedia article on the Laurel Factory and the history provided on the City of Laurel website, the mill was built in 1824 by Nicholas Snowden, heir to Richard Snowden who had received the original land grant. The mill was used to power cotton manufacture and as a saw mill. One factory made woolen hats and another, blankets. There were over 100 employees.

In 1835, Snowden's son-in-law, Horace Capron, partnered with Tiffany and Company to operate a factory employing 500 persons. When Capron went bankrupt, Tiffany acquired the property.

The mill and factory had a checkered existence and the mill burned to the ground in 1855. Although quickly rebuilt, the mill did not operate during the Civil War.

The map shows a grist mill (to grind grain into flour) downstream on a side street to Main nearer the Turnpike. Laurel also had three stores, one with a post office, a hotel, a blacksmith shop and an International Order of Odd Fellows hall.

All items are distributed year round at scheduled home visits and are a mixture of slightly used donations and brand-new items.

Registration is open to Greenbelt residents who live within the city limits. Applying for a place in the workshops can be done by email or in person. The current workshop is full. Registration for the new year-round program can be done in person or by phone. Farzin is the main contact person at 240-542-2019 or email kfarzin@greenbeltmd.gov.

GAIL is partnered with several organizations in this effort. Student nurses from Bowie State University and Washington Adventist University provide basic pediatric health assessments, baby milestone reviews, resource referral and linkage and tailored infant and toddler health education. A recently approved grant from the Greater D.C. Diaper Bank and Baby's Bounty supports the child mobility and furniture items.

The current parenting workshop covers many aspects of childhood development, nutrition education, lactation, baby milestones, immunizations and baby safety and resources. It will be presented in English at the Municipal Building and Spanish at Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

The Nursery Project serves a racially, ethnically and economically diverse population: most participants are employed at least part time and 95 percent are single parents. Twenty-five people annually require bilingual case management. Four special populations are served: teens, refugees, domestic abuse survivors and single mothers. Undocumented immigrants are also served.

In addition to a new and more succinct project name, "the biggest change is the availability of baby items to parents, as well as plans for future workshops and health fairs," said Farzin. Bowie State University and Washington Adventist University will develop any new workshops.

The Greenbelt Nursery Program is an extension of GAIL's mandate to address underserved residents, vulnerable families and undocumented immigrants in the community by providing pediatric wellness programming, community health programming and its most recent addition, a bilingual community outreach coordinator.

With the Nursery Project, Farzin stated that "our comprehensive approach involves parents and community members who are interested in the health and well-being of infants and toddlers. We look forward to seeing new and expectant Greenbelters join our year-round program and future workshops."

MilkBoy Presents The (un)choir

On Thursday, April 4 from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the MilkBoy ArtHouse in College Park, the (un)choir will meet and sing.

No auditions, no rehearsals, no long-term commitment. Just show up and sing a song. Get a lyric sheet to a well-known song. Allison Hughes, music director for College Chorale, will teach two- or three-part harmony. To cap the evening off, sing out with a choir of new friends. The event is free and all are welcome.

planning staff met with the county to discuss the concerns. She said city staff explained that without these conditions, especially of housing type and number being observed, the city has strong concerns about the lack of proposed public benefit in Phase 1, including the streetscape improvements along Greenbelt Road, Cherrywood Lane and Breezewood Drive.

At the meeting, Greenbelt's planning staff also explained to the county planning board that without any conditions about housing types there was concern that diverse housing types would not be included in the redevelopment.

As a result of this planning meeting between city and county, county technical staff agreed to amend their report to address these concerns in the findings section of the report rather than in the conceptual site plan itself. Councilmember Judith Davis expressed concern that the city take care not to lose its leverage to influence the development when the actual site planning process begins. Jordan asked if other affected parties, such as Berwyn Heights, had weighed in on the proposal. Matthew Tedesco, an attorney working on behalf of the Beltway Plaza project team, said that the proposal had been presented to the Berwyn Heights council but they had not expressed an opinion.

Beltway Plaza's owner, Quantum Company, has agreed to council's revised conditions and reiterated its willingness to execute a binding agreement that any future development will be required to meet the city's conditions. Arrangements were made to draft and sign the agreement within the week.

Porter said in a memo to council that Greenbelt city staff's bottom line is the recognition that the redevelopment of Beltway Plaza "offers a great opportunity for Greenbelt West and the City of Greenbelt and believes the revised conditions with the applicant's (Quantum/Beltway Plaza) agreement to execute a binding agreement provides a strong framework for supporting the high quality mixed use redevelopment of Beltway Plaza that was envisioned by the Sector Plan and further reinforced by the Urban Land Institute - Technical Assistance Panel (ULI-TAP) study" (see January 17 News Review for details of the study).

and zero. The outcome depends not only on the strength of the Co-op's case - but on the range and appeal of the competition's gambits. The Co-op is confident that it has made an excellent case but there are no guarantees. In the event the Co-op doesn't get the full amount requested, the funds to cover the gap must be raised. Because pledges are being taken at this time rather than cash on the barrelhead, the Co-op has elected to continue to take pledges which may or may not eventually be realized. The Co-op hopes that those who have not yet heeded the call will respond with donations and investment pledges. Of course, though it may not need all investments, the Co-op will very cheerfully request the fulfillment of all donations. Every donation assists the Co-op to fulfill the investments and use array savings from the solar roof to build a reserve for capital expenditures in the store.

Project Costs

Another factor keeping the appeal in full swing is that although the project cost is in better focus, it is not yet finalized. And even when the contract is signed, there's still the possibility that currently invisible problems will surface. Rare is the construction project without surprises. The steering committee, represented by Project Manager Steve Skolnik, is working on selecting contractors from among several bids received on each component of the system. Though choices have already been narrowed down to some extent, Skolnik is working with a consultant structural engineering firm to ensure that the remaining contenders properly address all the aspects of project installation and code compliance. The Co-op wants as few surprises as possible.

Savings and Finance

In the past several days, the steering committee has been focusing on refining its estimates of the savings resulting from the array. It is clear that the electricity savings are a significant fraction, perhaps 60 percent, of the total savings. But other savings accrue from the improved roof insulation, the shading of the roof during hot summer days by the array, the reduction in maintenance costs and the acquisition of solar renewable energy credits (which may become a more important factor if a bill now in the legislature should pass and require a higher fraction of renewable energy generation from power companies).

Based on these savings, the steering committee has determined (with Jones ensuring that mathematical righteousness prevailed) that a wide range of combinations of bond bill funding levels and project cost can be afforded within the range provided by current fundraising, but that the worst-case scenarios (very small bond bill funding, higher than expected project costs) will require additional resources. These will include additional pledges and may also require additional proposals to a variety of potential funding sources offering low interest loans. The Co-op is getting prepared to continue its full court press to get this done.

Hence the Co-op's decision to keep the doors open for pledges from the community.

Information on donation and investment options is available on the Co-op's website and there are forms and contact information available there as well as phone numbers for information. Go to solar.greenbelt.coop. The Co-op points out that investment options offered are not guaranteed.

Cathie Meetre is a News Review reporter. She also is a volunteer assisting the Co-op with various administrative and organizational tasks.

Girls' Community Robotics Team Wins Rookie Award

by Vijayanand Kowtha

Greenbelt has had strong robotics programs over the past 20 years with teams from Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) winning the First Robotics Competition locally and winning the National Championship in the 2001-2002 school year. Though the robotics program at ERHS is active now, during those earlier years there was a decline in interest and participation that led to the formation of Illusion and Bladerunners as Greenbelt community teams. Illusion is now at Chesapeake Math and Information Technology (CMIT) charter school in Laurel.

The girls team, Bladerunners Team 6893, won the 2018 Rookie All Star award. Members are from Greenbelt area middle schools. The team meets at the Wagner gym in the Lancaster Bible College campus on Good Luck Road, weekdays from 4 to 9 p.m. Bladerunners Team 6893 named their robot Nancy, after the NASA radioastronomer, Nancy Grace Roman, who was an early designer of the Hubble Space Telescope. The square robot Nancy autonomously puts spheres in the cargo bay of a "space ship" and can place hatch- es consistently.

Offering help and guidance to Bladerunners, Mentors Advancing STEM Education and Research (MASER) is a group of undergraduate and graduate students dedicated to working on complex science and engineering research projects. MASER gives students the opportunity to engage in research projects for academic research credit and facilitates the publication of research results. MASER students mentor high school students in STEM areas and facilitate STEM-related outreach in the Washington metropolitan region. MASER students interact with, and are mentored by, members of prestigious scientific societies such as the Washington Academy of Sciences, Sigma Xi and IEEE. This is the only program in the area dedicated to helping college students learn crucial technical skills in STEM in addition to training them in public speaking, formal presentation, teamwork and critical thinking. The goal is to encourage students to pursue careers in STEM fields, with computer engineering as the backbone. MASER senior mentors come from interdisciplinary backgrounds in science, engineering and the arts, and facilitate student projects which have, thus far, principally focused on designing, building and operating artificially intelligent systems. A monthly science café is held to bring in speakers who have covered topics such as "applying industrial and systems engineering." Interested MASER students mentor the Bladerunners FIRST robotics team. They hope to increase participation in the Anacostia Autonomy Robotics Technology and Sciences program that will showcase robotics autonomy at the D.C. Convention Center in October.

Bladerunners is planning to conduct a daily summer camp during which members of other D.C. teams can build and troubleshoot their robots in Greenbelt and compete at off-season events during the fall.

Vijayanand Kowtha is the founder and coach of Bladerunners.

Chalk Drawings Celebrate Holidays, Cultural Tradition

by Amy Hansen

Vijay Parameshwaran stands in front of an apartment building on Crescent Road and looks at his index card. The card holds his sketches, the sidewalk is his canvas.

It is March 20, the first day of spring. At 5:30 p.m., the natural light will last another hour or so. But Parameshwaran isn't in a hurry. There's a porch light to work by and besides, this is a night for relaxation.

In fact, this is a night for rangoli, the traditional Indian art of decorating the floor in vibrant colors and shapes. Rangoli can be made with many mediums: colored sand, flower petals and colored rice are common. Parameshwaran chooses chalk.

Tonight's drawing is a celebration of Holi, the Hindu holiday of spring. In many parts of India and Nepal, celebrants welcome Holi by throwing colorful powder and water at each other. It's a rollicking, hue-filled festival.

Parameshwaran's drawing starts with two large syringes, "sort of like super-soakers," he explains. He sits now, stretching over the drawing as he blocks out his design in white.

He draws white blobs – not quite circles – above the tip of the syringes. But then he stands up, looks at his outline and takes some colored chalk. He sits down again. He fills a blob with red and suddenly it's clear that the blob is colored water coming from the syringe. Then he stands up and checks his work and grabs the blue. He sits again.

Chalk drawing is an aerobic sport.

Parameshwaran lives in Greenbelt and works as a scientist at the Army Research Laboratory in Adelphi. Drawing, he says, is a way for him to unwind. It is creative, takes him away from the computer and is part of his Hindu tradition. Specifically, chalk decoration happens during Diwali, the festival of lights. Diwali is one of the biggest Hindu holidays of the year and takes place in October.

"During Diwali, every single front porch has a pattern," he says. "My mother used to do the drawing in our house. I want to keep the tradition alive."

Parameshwaran has created chalk art in Greenbelt since fall 2016. After he finished the first one, someone took a picture of his work and posted it on Greenbelters Facebook page.

"The response," he says, "was delightful."

Since then he started posting his own pictures and expanded from drawing for Hindu holidays to other holidays celebrated by his neighbors. He draws for Ramadan. He chalks for Hanukkah. He sketches for solstice. He colors for Christmas. Or at least he does if he has a clear, dry sidewalk to work on.

And if it rains?

"It's going to rain tonight," he acknowledges. "That doesn't matter to me as long as I get to do it, take a few pictures and share it. Rangoli design is not meant to be permanent. It is just for the holiday."

By 7:45 p.m., Parameshwaran is finished. His happy Holi note is bright and crisp, showing the holiday's moment before the chaos. Not only are there drops of water emerging from the syringe, but also neat bowls of the tinted powders thrown in the holiday's color free-for-all.

Parameshwaran takes pictures. At midnight the rain starts. At 6 a.m. the rain is hard. By the start of the workday on Thursday morning, his slate is wiped clean, ready for the next holiday.
