Goddard Updates Council On Missions and Site Plans

by Matthew Arbach

Goddard Space Flight Center (GSFC) Acting Director George Morrow and Associate Director Ray Rubilotta presented an update to the Greenbelt City Council on August 4 of their developing missions and site/infrastructure plans. Mayor Emmett Jordan said that GSFC has been a good friend to the city and that it is very important to work hand-in-hand.

Morrow, acting as director after the departure of Christopher Scolese, was appointed the 19th director of the National Reconnaissance Office on August 1. Formally the deputy director, Morrow is not seeking a permanent position and has decided to retire by December 31, citing that it was a hard decision to make.

A replacement is being sought, which will likely occur before that date.

Morrow began the meeting with a rundown of GSFC's major projects. The mirrors of the James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) were integrated and tested at GSFC. Northrop Grumman finished the mission spacecraft in late August. The launch date has been set for March 2021. The goal is to look back to times earlier than 500 million years after the start of the universe to find the first galaxies and hopefully rewrite science as did the Hubble Space Telescope (HST).

17th Annual Blues Festival Features National Act, More

by Gracie Todd

Greenbelt Blues Festival attendees danced, lounged and mingled as multiple acts played the blues throughout a sunny Saturday in Roosevelt Center.

This year the 17th annual Greenbelt Blues Festival scored a national act for the first time:

Eli Cook, a blues singer. According to his Wikipedia page, Cook once opened for B.B. King and appeared on the cover of Blues Matter! Magazine.

"It was a very down-home vibe," Cook said following his set. "It wasn't too big and corporate like some large festivals, but it was still a party."

The Virginian native headed home to Charlottesville, but after dark the festivities continued on in the New Deal Café, where The

Zero Waste Station Diverts Festival Waste From Landfill

by Tom Taylor

The Greenbelt Zero Waste Circle in partnership with the Department of Public Works, sponsored a demonstration in the picnic table area at this year's Labor Day Festival. The demonstration station was highlighted with a banner and included receptacles for compost, recycling and landfill trash.

The station was an effort to demonstrate the inclusion of composting along with recycling as an approach to reduce the amount of waste from the festival going to the landfill. Keeping food waste out of the landfill is an important strategy to reduce global warming as well as decreasing waste. Food waste buried in landfills emits methane, a powerful greenhouse gas, into the atmosphere.

Zero waste volunteers helped with proper sorting of waste. In addition to the station, which was set up by Public Works staff, recycling bins were paired with landfill bins throughout the festival grounds.

A total of 75 pounds of food scraps and other compostable materials were collected at the festival and diverted from the landfill. Besides food scraps, compostable materials collected included food-soiled paper products, such as paper napkins and paper plates, paper french fries and popcorn containers, pizza boxes and wood skewers.

"We've been talking about it for a long time and now it's imminent," said Mayor Emmett Jordan at the June 17 meeting of the Greenbelt City Council. He stressed the importance of a public education campaign so that residents would know how long to expect the construction to last and understand the impacts it would have on the community.

One Greenbelt resident, however, was still surprised to see the bulldozers and excavators crowding the park and drowning out the buzz of bugs and birds on her stroll September 9.

"It felt strange to come to the same place I come to and have it be altered," said Barbara Bjanas, 72, who was displeased by the amount of dust on the coat of her beagle-hound mix, Jack. "I have

Letters to the Editor

THANKS

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Greenbelt News Review staff for your constant commitment to journalism excellence over the course of so many years. I started reading the News Review when I first stepped into the Greenbelt Firehouse to live as a U of M college student from Upstate New York in January of 1983. There were over a dozen of us from both around the country and locally from around the corner who would run calls at night and when available during the day in return for a bunk to sleep in. Continuing with graduation, marriage and raising our children through their young years here, I don't believe that I have missed a single issue of the Review since.

I have always appreciated the care and balance the News Review employs when presenting topics. Our residents can always count on the professionals who make up the Greenbelt News Review staff to provide an accurate and factual account of city events. I have always found the News Review to be a stalwart and valued source of truth. On behalf of the Greenbelt Police Department, I would like to thank you for your important ongoing collaboration with our agency and the outstanding service that you provide to all of your readers. Your consistent, even and effective reporting and support of the Police Department's mission plus myself individually at times, is something that I have always appreciated and will never forget. Take care and thank you all again.

Classic Photo

We hope everyone saw the story in John Kelly's Washington Post column (September 9, B-3)

featuring the portrait of a Navajo Indian dancer taken by Greenbelt's own Barry Moien in 1971, when he was owner of a custom photo lab in Hyattsville.

Just as the portrait has lived on in school classrooms over the years, Barry in retirement has been spreading humor and good works at the Golden Age Club and all over town, where he is known for his helpfulness and friendliness. Well done, Barry!

Taking the Plunge

Thanks to the City of Greenbelt, staff and volunteers for offering its annual Pooch Plunge attended by my fellow canines and their humans. I especially enjoyed "welcoming" swimmers and touring the perimeter of the pool deck after my mishap in the deep end. (Glad my mom remembered her lifeguard rescue training!) Sadly, the dog days of summer have come to an end. Can't wait until next year's swim!

Correction

In the listing of the Labor Day Parade Winners, the red Tesla with the falcon-wing doors was incorrectly identified. It was a Model X (as in the letter of the alphabet, not the Roman numeral). We thank John Lippert, organizer of the Green Transportation Rally, for the clarification.

Brittany Runs a Marathon

Hilarious, outgoing and always up for a good time, New Yorker Brittany Forglar (Jillian Bell) is everybody's best friend – except maybe her own. At 27, her hard-partying ways, chronic underemployment and toxic relationships are catching up with her, but when she stops by a new doctor's office to try to score some Adderall she gets slapped with a prescription she never wanted: get healthy. Too broke for a gym and too proud to ask for help, Brit is at a loss until her seemingly-together neighbor Catherine (Michaela Watkins) pushes her to lace up her Converse sneakers and run one sweaty block. The next day she runs two. And soon, after finishing her first mile, she sets an almost unthinkable goal: running in the New York City Marathon. Bell and Watkins, who also teamed up for Sword of Trust, give fine performances in this uplifting Sundance Award-winning film based on a true story.

Thoughtful Discussion Under the Umbrellas

Paint Branch Church Celebrates 75th Anniv.

by Jeri Holloway

Hear Ye! Hear Ye! A Diamond Jubilee Concert is coming soon. On Sunday, September 22 at 4 p.m. the Paint Branch Unitarian Universalist Church is celebrating its 75th anniversary with music. In honor of this special occasion, the church will be presenting pianist Thomas Pandolfi. He will be performing on the Mason-Hamlin concert grand piano. His program will include Rhapsody on Themes from West Side Story, Gershwin's Prelude No. 2 – Blue Lullaby, Warsaw Concerto from the 1941 film Dangerous Moonlight and enough Chopin to satisfy all Chopin fanatics.

Pandolfi served as pianist at Paint Branch in the mid 1990's and kept the congregation enthralled with his keyboard skills and musicianship. He has continued his concert career on both local and international stages, including at the Strathmore with the National Philharmonic and the Prince George's Philharmonic. His international concerts have carried him across the globe to China and Europe, as well as Canadian debuts in British Columbia and Toronto.

There is no admission charge for this program. All donations are gratefully accepted. Paint Branch Church is located at 3215 Powder Mill Road, Adelphi. Call 301-937-3666 for information. There will be a reception following the program. CDs will be available for purchase and, of course, will be autographed by the pianist.

Fall SAGE Offers Green Living Class

The fall SAGE course, Living Green Made Easy, is an interactive course that leads consumers, homeowners, renters and everyday people to make informed decisions on day-to-day living, purchasing and investing to live more sustainably. There's a lot that can easily be done to be greener, sometimes even saving money in the process. This course is neither a science nor technical course. It will be conducted in simple language for everyone to understand and enjoy. It will encourage active participation, including show and tell. Both newcomers to the sustainability movement as well as avid, long-term environmentalists are welcome.

John Lippert and Jane Young are teaching this class after being enthusiastic SAGE students for several years. Seasoned Adults Growing Educationally (SAGE) is a tuition-free program for adults age 60 and older. Living Green Made Easy is offered Monday mornings at the Community Center and Monday afternoons at the Bowie Senior Center beginning October 7. SAGE registration is now open.

The Roosevelts in Greenbelt

by James Giese

(This is the third of a three-part series about the visits of Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt to Greenbelt. The first story reported primarily on the President's visits. This and the second part of the story are about Eleanor's visits.)

At the end of 1936, the Resettlement Administration had been removed from the Green Town's project and Rexford Tugwell had resigned due to the great amount of adverse press publicity. Another agency, the Farm Security Administration, had taken over construction management of the incomplete project. Wallace Richards, the original project coordinator, had also been removed but continued to retain an active interest in it, according to Cathy Knepper, author of Greenbelt: A Living Legacy of the New Deal.

She relates, "He was dismayed at the way the Army engineer planned to finish the town. Having met President and Mrs. Roosevelt when he conducted them through town on their tours of inspection, and perceiving their interest – particularly hers – he wrote to Mrs. Roosevelt to express his deep concern. . . Mrs. Roosevelt scribbled this note on the letter: 'FDR: This seems to me most important. There is a new experiment being evolved which curtailment may seriously hurt. Won't you look into it? E.R.'"

On November 6, 1937, with the first residents now moving into Greenbelt, the President wrote a letter to his wife urging her and Will Alexander to go out to Greenbelt and see it some morning or afternoon upon her return from a trip, according to Knepper.

An Interesting Day

They did on December 9, another Thursday, and in her next-day column Roosevelt reported: "This has been an interesting day. Dr. Will Alexander, the administrator of the Farm Security Administration in the Department of Agriculture, and I went out to the Greenbelt, Maryland, project this morning to see what changes had come about since last spring.

"House after house is now occupied, a temporary cooperative store is open, the school is functioning and this place which had only workmen when I was there before, is now a real community. I was amused to have the young mayor [Louis Bessemer] tell me that everyone wanted to hold meetings and start community activities, and that though they had not grown up together, everybody wanted to know everybody else.

"They have no streetlamps as yet to relieve the darkness at night, but they tell me that when all the houses are lit up, it is most attractive. As an example of the neighborly spirit that exists, I was told that one woman coming down to the post office after dark heard a voice say! 'Good evening,' and responded promptly 'Good Evening, may I know who you are?' They have had some of the usual vicissitudes which accompany new houses and new settlements. Two houses leaked, the bus company, which had practically agreed to give the community transportation service, backed out on second thought, but these difficulties have been surmounted. The houses have been repainted and the bus is now being run on a cooperative basis, showing that with the right kind of determination difficulties can be conquered.

"One of the most interesting stories which I had never heard before was the story of the establishment of the nursery for trees and shrubs. When the ground was being cleared, one of the men on WPA [Works Progress Administration, Angus MacGregor] remarked that it seemed a shame to destroy so many good plants. Enough could be salvaged to landscape the entire community, he said.

"The people in charge asked him what he knew about gardening and discovered he had been brought over from England to take charge of one of the estates of a very rich gentleman who decided when the Depression came along, that the proper way to economize was to get rid of his employees, so here was an excellent gardener on WPA. He was given the charge to salvage everything he could. Most of the things he salvaged have lived in the nursery and he has done every bit of the landscaping with material taken out of the woods on the property.

"I feel the Federal Government should take the lead in getting the maximum cooperation on all its projects for the good of the people."

Knepper says she achieved good press and this was supplemented by the visit of a congressman, Reginald Wadsworth, who was the principal architect, Morgenthau's secretary and the Farm Security Administration press relations chief. Subsequently, Congress appropriated the necessary funds and the town was completed as originally planned.

The December 15 Cooperator, the original name of this paper, reported on her visit with the following headlines: "First Lady Makes Surprise Visit Here!!!! Praises 'Neighborly Spirit' and Studies Co-op Store project; Finds School Children Happily at Work; Seeks Information on Medical Files." The article reported that, "With unflinching tact," she inquired about local transportation problems, how "cooperative medicine" might work, and visited a school classroom and a randomly selected home and "smiled tolerantly" as a Washington Daily News photographer took pictures of her for the evening edition. She also left with several copies of the Greenbelt Cooperator.

A second story with equally bold headlines reported on the visit by the congressman.

Marilyn Maryn, the Cooperator's high school editor, wrote in the September 29, 1944 issue, "One incident I will never forget is the day Mrs. Roosevelt visited our fourth-grade class and patted Paul Strickler on the head. 'I'll never wash that spot,' exclaimed the overwhelmed youth."

I have not been able to find any documentation of other Eleanor Roosevelt visits to Greenbelt in those formative years. However, Barbara Likowski and Jay McCarl in their article, Social Construction, in the 50th Anniversary History of a New Town, reported that Mildred Parker was one of the first teachers in Greenbelt. She is quoted as saying, "We had visitors from all over the country. . . Eleanor Roosevelt came to the school a number of times and usually it was a shock when the door would open and she would appear with her Secret Service escorts."

Parker probably erred about the presence of the Secret Service. According to an article by Carl Anthony – First Ladies, Secret Service Protection and Their Codenames – posted on the firstladies.org blog, "Eleanor Roosevelt, with her constant travels around the nation and making three overseas trips as First Lady, felt the presence of protection was an encumbrance on her activities. She refused to accept Secret Service protection and the agency acquiesced only on the condition that she always carry a pistol and learn how to properly use it. Mrs. Roosevelt went through the training, but rarely took her gun with her on trips."

Pioneer Gladys Long told Dorothy Lauber for her 50th Anniversary compilation of the recollections of early residents, Looking Back, Memories: The visits of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, "She was very interested in Greenbelt and one time she went to the [Stanley B.] Rider house to see how it looked with its Greenbelt furniture. This was at 1-K Gardenway."

At the Rally

At the start of the war, residents got actively involved in civil defense efforts. According to Virginia Beauchamp's article, The War Years, in Greenbelt: History of a New Town, Greenbelt's town council had already authorized a defense council and when war broke out George Panagoulis, Greenbelt's director of public safety (the city then had a com-

Pooch Plunge Again a Success: Dogs Play Ball, Learn to Swim

by David Blumberg

Every dog had its day at the annual Pooch Plunge on Saturday at the Greenbelt Aquatic & Fitness Center.

The event was sponsored by Greenbelt Animal Control and Well-Wishers for the Animals of Greenbelt Shelter. All proceeds went to the Greenbelt Animal Shelter.

Jen Cockerham, a volunteer at the event, said the Pooch Plunge is a popular event among the residents of Greenbelt.

"The residents look forward to this every year," Cockerham said.

Some owners brought tennis balls for their dogs. Others were trying to teach their dogs to swim.

Pallas Bane and Scott Schroth brought their dog, Thorin, to the event to help him get acclimated to being in the water.

Stephanie O'Brien brought her friend's dog, Thatcher, to the event. Thatcher also was getting used to swimming in the pool.

"She's a little hesitant, but she's been up past her belly so she's getting it," O'Brien said.

O'Brien is new to Greenbelt but had encountered the Pooch Plunge in the past while living nearby.

"I had seen it last year. I was walking around the lake and came back this way and saw it. So I'm like 'Aw, that looks really cool, ya know?'"

She said she figured she had to try to bring Thatcher to this year's event.

Dogs around the pool were meeting their neighbors and sharing in games of fetch. Thatcher and another dog named Betty became fast friends.

"She met a new big buddy there, Betty. So she's happy with Betty," O'Brien said.

According to Cockerham, the turnout was pretty good for the event this year.

"Today is great and we are expecting to have people the full four hours," Cockerham said.

This reporter asked several dogs to comment but they all just sniffed me and went back to splashing in the water.

Building Fire at Franklin Park Displaces Some Residents

by Fatemeh Paryavi

Around 10:30 a.m. on Friday, September 6, the Prince George's County Fire Department (PGFD) responded to a fire in a three-story building at 9336 Edmonston Road in the Franklin Park apartment complex, according to a tweet by PGFD Public Information Officer Mike Brady.

There were no injuries reported. According to PGFD, 16 adults and 10 children were displaced from eight apartments in the building. The other three apartments in the building were vacant. The American Red Cross and Franklin Park management are assisting the displaced.

George Mathews, public liaison officer for the Greenbelt Police, said that there didn't seem to be any extensive damage. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

bined police-fire department), became the town's air raid warden. There were black-out curtains, civil defense wardens patrolling the streets and aircraft spotters on the roof at the center on the look-out for Nazi bombers. It was also determined there was an emergency need for funding a local canteen, first-aid supplies and arm bands for officials. The Defense Council decided to hold a rally at Center School with tickets costing a dollar for couples and 10 cents for each child. The event raised $1,000.

Pioneer Carson Howell worked at the White House on Mrs. Roosevelt's staff. It was probably his idea to invite the first lady. His wife Lucille told Lauber, "My husband worked for the White House. . . . When the Roosevelts moved into the White House, a new detail was formed to assist Mrs. Roosevelt and he was a member of it. Later, during the war, Carson was the one who asked Mrs. Roosevelt to come out to Greenbelt to the bond rally."

In her February 24, 1942 column, Roosevelt wrote: "I went to the civilian defense rally on Saturday night at Greenbelt, Md., the housing community which Mr. Rex Tugwell had the vision to promote. The meeting was in the schoolhouse, for they have there a real conception of community activity and work. Their Greenbelt Community Band gave a very good concert. They had good reports on the work they have done for civilian defense. Better than anything else, I had a sense of community spirit, which is what we must develop now everywhere in our country."

From Scales to Tails: Girl Scouts Host Annual Pet Show

by Kayla Kozak

Pet owners and show spectators alike gathered on the Greenbelt Library's lawn on the morning of Saturday, August 31, to celebrate Greenbelt's coolest companions. The event, which encourages locals to bring any and all pets to participate, takes place annually during Greenbelt's Labor Day Festival.

This year the competition was organized by Girl Scout Troop 27. "This is only our second year doing this," said troop leader Aaron Marcavitch. "It gets handed down from Girl Scout troop to Girl Scout troop."

As hosts, the Girl Scouts were tasked with judging the animals, an important job since in this competition there are no losers. Each pet is bestowed a title determined by the girls. "They decide, and the categories are based very specifically on the pets that come through," explained troop leader Caitlin McGrath. Such categories included Strongest Dog with the Best Name, received by chocolate lab Hazel, and Hula Trickster, which was awarded to Yasha, the lei-adorned lab, for her impressive variety of talents.

Among the fan favorite participants was Oldest Reptile Michelangelo, the 20-something-year-old turtle whose true age is unknown, even to his owners. Michelangelo was not the only reptile in attendance, however. Mondo the lizard, owned by 9-year-old Marie McAndrew, walked away with the title of Coolest Color Changer and a legion of new admirers. "He was a Christmas present after a full year of neat rooms," said Marie's mother, Dmetria McAndrew. Dmetria is also the owner of Jewel the

Learn to Do NASA Science At This Sunday's Experiment

Come and meet the GLOBE Observer app at NASA Goddard Visitor Center on Sunday, September 15 from 1 to 3 p.m. Anyone who can take a smartphone photo can do NASA science with GLOBE Observer. As NASA satellites fly overhead and take pictures of Earth from above, people all over the world are taking pictures from the ground using GLOBE Observer. These photos help NASA scientists confirm what the satellites see from space, and sometimes learn things the satellites can't see from space. At this month's Sunday Experiment, hear how people everywhere are helping NASA understand clouds, dust storms, land cover, mosquitoes and more.

The free program is offered at the Goddard Visitor Center, usually on the third Sunday of each month. Activities showcase Goddard's world-renowned science and engineering research and technological developments.

In addition to exploring interesting topics in science, technology, engineering and mathematics, the program celebrates major science missions managed by NASA Goddard and set to launch in the near future. At every Sunday Experiment, children and adults alike can discover the excitement of Goddard through fun, engaging activities, and leave inspired, informed and impressed about Goddard's revolutionary research and technology.

Registration is not required. Children's activities are best suited for ages 5 to 10. For program information, call the visitor center at 301-286-8981.

man and woman on the south pole of the Moon, was announced in March 2019. Morrow was very excited about the role GSFC will play in this, which includes communications technology and scientific studies. The end result will be a small lunar space station and lunar lander, leading to a sustained presence on the Moon.

The Plankton, Aerosol, Cloud, Ocean Ecosystem (PACE) satellite is in full-scale development, with GSFC having a full in-house responsibility for the spacecraft and main instrument. The satellite's goal is to make an in-depth study of the world's oceans, especially their role in climate change. GSFC has built many existing weather satellites, in partnership with NOAA.

The Wide Field Infrared Survey Telescope (WFIRST) was designed and built at GSFC as well as integrated with the spacecraft. Its launch is planned for 2025 to supersede the HST.

Morrow emphasized the major role GSFC has played in satellite servicing, including five missions to the HST. He said that the future will see more robotic servicing.

GSFC managed to survive the most recent government shutdown and keep the majority of their projects going. Their $5 billion budget has remained pretty healthy, yet they look to increase funds for projects like Artemis.

Morrow detailed GSFC's involvement in community outreach and education. GSFC has 445 high school and college interns on-site, many from local schools. Six Eleanor Roosevelt High School students spent last year in an academic research program. Greenbelt Middle School was one of five sites for a STEM camp focused on space engineering. A program designed for underserved communities gave 30 middle school students access to a GSFC-designed STEM program aimed at closing the opportunity gap. Councilmember Leta Mach reminded everyone of the STEM/aerospace program offered at Duval High School, not just ERHS.

Rubilotta gave an update to the Facilities Master Plan, which is a 20-year look-ahead at the anticipated needs and requirements of GSFC, according to the plan. A workshop phase has started, focused on each of the six campuses, hoping to create a holistic viewpoint, said Rubilotta.

Under study is a proposed work-week closure of the main gate on Greenbelt Road from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Pedestrian access to the nearby businesses is vital, especially during lunchtime, and will be maintained. A card system will assure security. The Instrument Development Facility is expected to be finished by next year. Traffic and auto safety was emphasized by all, specifically in the North Campus, which would require a contributing agency relationship with the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center, which controls much of the area, or the National Park Service for interchange modifications on the Baltimore-Washington Parkway. Rubilotta characterized the Master Plan as a thought process and encouraged council and other stakeholders to present their ideas. "There is not an unlimited supply of money," said Morrow, "so GSFC must be strategic in its promotional and institutional activities in order to meet the demand of all their programs."

Morrow asserted that he looks for GSFC to be a "destination of choice" to visitors and to be instrumental in the creation of future scientists.

transported the materials to MOM's Organic Market in College Park, which maintains a collection site behind the store where compostable items can be dropped off. Veteran Compost picks up the materials from MOM's and hauls them to its commercial composting facility. Veteran Compost is a veteran-owned business that processes these materials into high quality organic compost that can be used in gardens, lawns, landscaping and farming.

Zero Waste Circle volunteers also staffed the recycling station at the Outstanding Citizen Reception Friday night in the city council chambers. Dee and Robert Zugby of the Outstanding Citizen Selection Committee, the reception hosts, did an outstanding job of providing recyclable supplies for the event. The Outstanding Citizens for 2019, Lore Rosenthal and Michael Hartman are both members of the Circle.

During the festival weekend, a total of 18 volunteers, including students and members of Zero Waste, contributed more than 60 hours of service to zero waste activities. The students received credit for community service hours for their work.

and strategy to reduce our environmental footprint by minimizing the amount of waste that is landfilled or burned, and to conserve resources by considering all discarded materials as resources to be recovered and reused.

The Greenbelt City Council proclaimed the week of September 2 as Zero Waste Week in Greenbelt at its August 12 meeting. The proclamation encourages "all our residents and city programs to increase their zero waste efforts by engaging in reducing waste, reusing materials, composting food scraps and yard waste and increasing household and city recycling, as these are effective ways to make a positive impact on our environment, preserve our natural resources, protect our health, reduce our landfill needs and costs, and enhance the quality of life for present and future generations."

New Deal Café sponsors the event along with Friends of New Deal Café Arts.

Tom LeaMond, who serves on the New Deal Café's board of directors, said the festival experiences growth every year. "Every time we bring someone into Roosevelt Center for the first time, they see that there is something here for them and come back," LeaMond said.

Local music impresario Jazz, who describes herself as the founder of the organization Blues in Maryland, said that there were likely between 400 and 500 people who attended throughout the event. Jazz coordinates blues festivals throughout the area and serves as the advertising executive of the DC Blues Society.

Among those attendees was Tommy Jay, who said he has seldom missed a Greenbelt Blues Festival. "It's always awesome," Jay said.

Jazz said that this year's festival had a special vibe. "This year is our hippie, dippy, trippy blues festival," Jazz said. "It's just got that atmosphere, that ambiance, that feel."

The festival was not limited to performances. The morning began with a blues yoga class by instructor Tina McCloud of Got Yoga, and then representatives from the Archie Edwards Blues Heritage Foundation taught blues music workshops. Vendors, including a fairy hair booth, populated the Roosevelt Center.

Other festival acts included Dar Stellabotta, Ruben Montoya, Capital Blues Ensemble, Shirleta Settles, Kevin Robinson & KERQ, The Mike Westcott Band and Moonshine Society, who kicked off the festival on Friday night in New Deal Café.

developed a stronger tie to the lake and a deeper understanding of nature.”

Terri Hruby, director of planning and community development, explained these measures are necessary because of the consent order issued by the Maryland Department of the Environment (MDE). A 2008 inspection deemed the dam a high hazard, which initiated the order in 2010.

Hruby admitted that she had hoped the repairs would have begun in July, but despite the setback, she remains confident of a seven-month construction period. KC Construction Company, known for its success in dam repair and maintenance, was approved by council to tackle the project under a $1.7 million contract.

Phase 1 of construction occurred in 2016, a process that Hruby described as fixing the drain pipe and valve of the lake. Phase 2, which is predicted to last until December 11, entails more invasive action. Hruby said KC Construction will move forward with draining the lake about 4 to 5 feet to install a chimney filter and toe drain, mechanisms used to deflect the flow of water from a certain area.

“Are we going to leave enough water in the lake to keep it from killing everything in the lake is what I’m concerned about,” said Councilmember Rodney Roberts at the meeting. He then suggested the use of portable dams rather than drastically altering the lake’s natural state. Bjanes also expressed worry for the well-being of Greenbelt Lake’s wildlife, especially the turtles, as her other pet is a rescued Eastern Box Turtle.

Another consideration was the project’s proposal to work with disadvantaged business-enterprise subcontractors in Maryland. Councilmember Colin Byrd cast doubt on the system of categorizing a firm as a Disadvantaged Business Enterprise (DBE). Hruby responded that DBEs are classified as firms comprised of minorities or women that have been certified and accepted by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

One citizen brought up the subject of pay. The man asked Hruby to verify that KC Construction would offer at least minimum wage to its employees. Hruby assured him that all contractors have to comply with city mandates which encompass compensation regulations.

Funding for the dam will come from the city, the State of Maryland and the EPA, reported the Greenbelt Weekly Roundup. In Fiscal Year 2017, voters supported the city’s loan-funding plans which would cost up to $2.5 million, according to Hruby’s memorandum. Greenbelt received a $285,000 capital grant as well that the city must match. Hruby said the MDE will provide additional financial support through the Water Quality Revolving Loan Fund.

Construction is scheduled to continue until March 2020, when the third and final phase is initiated. The Greenbelt Weekly Roundup warned citizens to expect construction noise and equipment, path closures and the lake’s recession in the meantime.

Construction begins on the Lake dam.

Rotary Classic Car Show Raises Funds for Charities

by Butch Hicks

More than 75 classic cars, displaying design glamor of bygone eras, parked across the Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 parking lot on August 31 as the Greenbelt Rotary Club conducted its annual Hot Rods and Classics Car Show fundraiser.

An estimated 200 visitors certified public interest in vehicular displays honoring automotive designs of other times. Owners of classic cars with names such as Pontiac Firebird, Plymouth Road Runner, Chevy Camaro and Ford Mustang paid entry fees that contributed to local and national Rotary charity programs. Show participants’ auto-customizing efforts awed visitors with chrome-laden designs, creative and amazing paint jobs and awesome demonstrations of densely-packed horsepower.

Mike O’Neill, a member of the Asphalt Angels classic cars organization, who won a Best in Show award for his ‘98 Pontiac Firebird, said the classic car show was a complete success. “For a first-time effort, the Rotary Club and Greenbelt American Legion hit a home run,” he said. “If the idea was generating funds to support community activities and charities, they staged the event the right way. Plenty of timely pre-event publicity helped draw maximum participation, and it was a family event with plenty for the kids to do. Good food and music just added to the friendly tone of the show. I will be back next year and I believe, from the comments I heard, plenty of this year’s participants are returning next year. Well done.”

The event was a win for all concerned, said American Legion Post 136 Commander Greg Gigliotti. “Greenbelt’s Rotary Club and American Legion support various Greenbelt and local community events and charities. Through our team effort we will not only help various charity projects, we also contributed to Greenbelt’s reputation for having caring, giving community organizations.”

It was clear from various classic car admirers’ comments that the show cars were thought of as champions appreciated for craftsmanship as opposed to being simply old cars. Mark Fuerst, car show coordinator for the Greenbelt Rotary, said they appreciated all of the classic car owners who participated in the show and contributed to the vital work accomplished by Greenbelt’s Rotary Club and Rotary International. “The creative work and dedication by the car owners was astounding,” said Fuerst. “Some won awards for various accomplishments such as best in show, best engine and best interior, among others. Greenbelt Rotary will be able to continue to offer scholarships for students at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, provide support for students and teachers at Springhill Lake Elementary School, sponsor the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival, fund local students in leadership training and training camp, and assist the Greenbelt Fire Department with purchases of safety equipment. These are a few of the projects and causes Greenbelt Rotary has supported over the years. Our team effort with the Greenbelt American Legion folk has ensured communities around our area will continue to receive Rotary Club support.”

Fuerst said the Rotary Club always seeks community support. Rotary meetings are Tuesday mornings at 7:45 a.m. for breakfast at the Crowne Plaza (formerly Marriott) on Ivy Lane. He said it’s an invitation to “enjoy the fellowship and speakers as we work together to improve our community and our world.”

CDCG Skills Training Helps Groups Nurture Members

by Aileen Kroll

Greenbelt's Community Pledge embodies the best of what city residents have to offer, emphasizing that the city's strength is "diverse people living together in a spirit of cooperation. We celebrate people of many cultures, faiths, and races living together. By sharing together, we all are enriched." Seeking to enact these words, The Center for Dynamic Community Governance (CDCG) will be offering an opportunity to learn about how to help groups be well-run and to provide positive opportunities for individual and group growth and development. The session, open to all residents of the Greenbelt community, will be held on Saturday, September 21, at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

This is the second in a three-part series of training sessions entitled Growing Skills & Nurturing Talent. The session aims to help participants develop skills to run meetings that are both efficient as well as a positive experience for attendees. The session will train participants how groups make decisions and resolve disagreements in creative, transparent and inclusive ways. CDCG presented the first session on April 13 at the Community Center. Dynamic and interactive group discussions were held throughout the day with community organization representatives and local business people. All who attended that meeting are welcome to attend this upcoming session in order to receive additional training in effective governance modalities. The staff of CDCG also welcomes newcomers. This training session is open to all including local business people, community organizers and anyone interested in growing their organizational skills. CDCG extends a special invitation to children and teens who want to develop their leadership skills. The mighty Earth Squad kids will be participating during the course of the day. There is no cost for the training and no registration is required. Attendees may stop by any time during the hours in which this training will be offered. International CDCG trainer, John Buck, will also be offering one-on-one confidential, professional, customized analysis of community group and business processes and operations, including workflow design and volunteer management in 45-minute increments throughout the day. This offering includes a month of no-cost follow-up coaching. Contact Aileen Kroll at aileen@dynamic-governance.org to schedule a time slot for the training session. The conveners of this session will be assisted by members of the Greenbelt Time Bank. Participants will have the opportunity to learn about TimeBank and how it works. CDCG is grateful to the Greenbelt Community Foundation for supporting this series of sessions.

Aileen Kroll is co-founder and co-director of CDCG.

Cyclists See City, Savor Great Outdoors on Tour de Greenbelt

by Fatemeh Paryavi

Ever since he was five years old, Joe Robbins had a passion for biking. Nowadays, aside from participating in the annual Bike-to-Work Day, he also participates in the Tour de Greenbelt bike tour that has been a community annual event for about eight years.

When asked about his passion for biking, Robbins answered that he likes it because of its independence. He enjoys “just getting places on my own without having to rely on a car or a bus or a train.”

The September 1 tour was led by Mayor Emmett Jordan and Jeff and Laurie Lemieux from Proteus Bicycles.

The route, about eight miles long, was joined by many Greenbelt residents, as well as two Columbia residents.

Greenbelt resident Ana Batun said that the tour “was great. I like meeting all the people from the community that I never met before.”

Joining the tour about two years after its initiation, Jordan said that the tour is fun and “it’s actually fun seeing people from different parts of the city come together.”

Maryland Milestones Holds Photo Contest

Maryland Milestones/Anacostia Trails Heritage Area Inc. seeks photographs for its annual contest to capture the beauty, history, people and distinctive character of the Anacostia Trails Heritage Area. Winning images become the basis for the group’s yearly calendar and may be used in marketing and advertising. The deadline for entries is September 27.

Make sure the subject matter is within the Heritage Area (roughly Northern Prince George’s County). Not all sites along the Anacostia or Patuxent Rivers will qualify.

Details for submission and rules can be found at anacostiatrials.org/annual-photo-contest.

Comedy Show At The Clarice

Maryland Night Live will be presenting at NextNOW Fest at 8:30 p.m. on September 14 at The Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center at the University of Maryland, College Park. Directed by Walker Green, Sammy Garcia and Liezel Werner, Maryland Night Live is a comedy show inspired by Saturday Night Live that brings comedians, musicians and various other performers together in one laugh-filled night. Admission is free.

Racing Extinction At the Reel & Meal

Reel & Meal at the New Deal Café will screen Racing Extinction this Monday, September 16. The evening begins with an optional plant-based buffet at 6:30 p.m. and the screening starts at 7 p.m.

In Racing Extinction, a team of artists and activists exposes the hidden world of extinction with never-before-seen images. Two worlds drive extinction across the globe, potentially resulting in the loss of half of all species. Using covert tactics and state-of-the-art technology, the Racing Extinction team exposes these two worlds in an inspiring affirmation to preserve life as we know it.

Preventing species from going extinct in the face of so many threats takes collaboration. Federal agencies, global corporations and each of us has to commit to the same set of actions when a species is in danger of disappearing forever. Join Reel & Meal on Monday and find out how you can be part of the solution.

Reel and Meal, a monthly film series focused on environmental, social justice and animal rights issues, is organized by Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch Group, Green Vegan Networking, Utopia Film Festival and the Prince George’s County Peace & Justice Coalition.

For more information on this month’s program, contact Green Vegan Networking’s Cam MacQueen at cam@theblockoffbiltmore.com or visit the New Deal Café’s e-calendar at newdealcafe.com/events/ReelAndMeal. Or, go to racingextinction.com.

Colorful Artwork Brightens Walls at the New Deal Café

by Melissa Sites

An explosion of color and geometric shapes dazzles the eye at the New Deal Café's newest art show, Friendship 2019, featuring the art of Sara Sanchez, Aryn Townsley and Chrissy Wilkin. These pieces are bold, colorful and exciting. They are the result of a dynamic collaboration among three friends who have worked together and inspired each other over the past two years.

In Sanchez's large-scale pieces, giant insects dominate the wall. One wall features Prey, an emerald praying mantis poised against a purple background divided into the repeating arcs of the flower of life geometric pattern. On another wall, Lost and Found depicts a giant flying insect with colorful wing cases, in front of a geometric pattern in shades of blue with stars and swirling galactic energy behind it. Prey hangs between two pieces by Townsley, while Lost and Found is staged amidst four of Wilkin's pieces.

Wilkin has also used geometric patterns, superimposing them into photographs of West Coast giant redwoods. The photos were taken while she was on a healing journey after suffering several personal losses. She incorporated sacred geometry into watercolor pieces, including Reflection, an organic exploration of a woman's form and Raven, a naturalistic portrait of a bird sitting on the branch of a snag, but with a shimmering geometric mandala near it.

The show as a whole combines naturalism and bright neon colors, realism and psychedelic energy, such as in Wilkin's No Mud, No Lotus, in which a graceful pink lotus blooms in front of a glowing lotus-inspired mandala. Pieces by Townsley, including Buckets of Rain and Different Strokes, engage the viewer with the intricate, colorful details of a surreal journey through mental landscapes.

Of 17 pieces in the front room, five are by Sanchez, five are by Townsley, six are by Wilkin and one is a collaboration. The trio worked together on Over the Dam, an oil painting featuring an introspective octopus and two surreal koi. However, the effects of their collaboration are clear in other parts of the show. Two pieces by Sanchez entitled Ecstasy 1 and 2 reflect Townsley's psychedelic aesthetic, while Townsley's comically titled Butt Stuff (inspired by Kurt Vonnegut's memorable discussion of the asterisk in his novel, Breakfast of Champions) is at home on the wall with Wilkin's more classi-

Sanchez used the acrylic pour technique to beautiful effect in her pieces, Colorado and Sedona. The earthy colors and organic forms of Sedona carry over into Wilkin's striking and mysterious narrative depiction of The Vortex. Townsley's vibrational colors, Wilkin's realism and Sanchez's energetic surrealism leap off the wall to converse with each other and with the viewer.

Two of the friends met at the University of Maryland School of Art and teach for Prince George's County Public Schools, with Wilkin at Eleanor Roosevelt High School and Sanchez in Bowie. Wilkin and Townsley met in their hometown of Westminster, Md. As artists and teachers, they have encouraged each other to grow, keep going and expand their work.

Friends of New Deal Café Arts (FONDCA) sponsors visual, performing and literary arts at the New Deal Café and in Roosevelt Center. According to Wilkin, who is also FONDCA's art show coordinator, "the show has been planned since two years ago. We were at Aryn's house when we decided to have the show."

Together, the artists selected 32 pieces to show from the many they produced over those two years. FONDCA will host an opening reception at the New Deal on Sunday, September 22, 3 to 5 p.m. with music by Steven Drummond. Friendship 2019 will be up until November 4.
