

Biennial Empty Bowls Event Fills Need of Help-By-Phone

by Judy Goldberg-Strassler

The Greenbelt Pottery Group and Greenbelt Community Church, United Church of Christ jointly hosted another successful Empty Bowls event to benefit Help-By-Phone. It was truly a communitywide effort. Culinary contributions – from Cedars of Lebanon, Silver Diner, Generous Joe's, Chef Lou's and many individuals – were enjoyed while music led by Rachel Alexander and Rebecca Lemus filled the air. The diners each selected a unique handcrafted ceramic bowl and gushed with their personal newfound treasure.

Under the leadership of Judy Goldberg-Strassler and Gina Mai Denn of the Greenbelt Pottery

Group and Jan Derry from the Greenbelt Community Church, with the support of Greenbelt Recreation and RUAK (Random Unselfish Acts of Kindness), the event took on a theme of community. From the beginning, when GATE produced a public service announcement promoting the event and the Old Greenbelt Theatre aired it before every movie showing, the event took on a feeling of community. The Greenbelt Interfaith Leadership Alliance (GILA) also played an active role in promoting the event within each of their communities.

It all came together with both

Racism in County Real Estate: Museum Talk Addresses Past

by Aneurin Canham-Clyne

"There is a segregationist history in this town, but it is not recorded in contracts," Stuart Eisenberg told about 40 Greenbelt residents at a lecture hosted by the Greenbelt Museum on Thursday, October 17.

Eisenberg, who is the executive director of the Hyattsville Community Development Corporation, studied the land records in Hyattsville and nearby towns in Prince George's County in an effort to understand the way property deeds helped perpetuate segregation. The lecture, delivered at the Community Center, is part of a series sponsored by the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum and the City of Greenbelt.

Lawana Holland-Moore, the operations and outreach manager for the Greenbelt Museum, said the lecture emphasized the deep impact of segregation on the county.

"When we're talking about things like restrictive covenants or redlining, we're talking about ways of systematically keeping entire communities segregated and keeping entire communities out," Holland-Moore said. "It affects things like generational wealth, and the ability to create it and maintain it."

"Racially restrictive covenants were a very powerful way for exclusion to be achieved because you just could not sell your property to someone who was African American," Eisenberg said.

According to Eisenberg, starting at the end of the 19th century, through the late 1940s, developers used restrictive covenants to create all-white subdivisions, encoding segregation into the deeds of their properties.

In Hyattsville and other parts of Prince George's County, major land developers like Otto Zantinger wrote racial exclusion into hundreds of deeds, sometimes for

Council Reviews Watershed Report, Addresses Issues

by Matthew Arbach

At a city council worksession on Monday, October 21, Mayor Emmett Jordan welcomed several individuals who, in his words, are "passionate about making sure Greenbelt's watersheds are protected." These were Bill Duncan, from Friends of Still Creek, and Tom Taylor, of the Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch Group (BCWWG), both of whom are part of Greenbelt Homes Inc.'s Storm Water Task Force (GHISWTF), as well as Susan Barnett from the BCWWG and Lutz Rastaetter from the Citizens to Conserve and Restore Indian Creek (CCRIC). They discussed the state of these vital watersheds as well as ongoing projects.

Duncan and Taylor began the meeting with an update on GHISWTF which was founded in May 2016. While their primary mandate is to address storm water issues within GHI, said Duncan, they are devoted to being advocates for the larger picture by getting all three stream groups working together to develop something comprehensive. He said, "We are not experts, but are instead looking to bring in consultants who can bring forth designs and technology to address individual problems." One of these consultants is University of Maryland (UMD) assistant research professor from the Department of Environmental Science and Technology, Peter May, who is involved with the planning and design of the storm water management along with GHI staff.

"The task force is currently in the preliminary stages," said Taylor, of a comprehensive geographic information system mapping of the entirety of GHI. This will prioritize the most pressing needs of the area and will benefit

BARC Land Reuse

I see from the News Review lead story last week that Greenbelt has chosen to shoot itself in the foot, yet again. The Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC), a U.S. Government owned property, has a large area that is no longer being used. The government wants to reuse this area for the U.S. Mint printing. The reuse plan satisfies and may exceed all applicable environmental regulations.

This relocation will bring a number of jobs to the Greenbelt area. It will also allow BARC to increase their allocation of funds for research by relieving them of the maintenance costs for the unused area. As part of this relocation the government will pay for any road upgrades required to accommodate the increased vehicle traffic.

Consider the alternatives. BARC research funding will continue to be diluted by the maintenance costs for the unused area. Due to this reduced productivity, the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) could elect to close BARC, move the research elsewhere and sell off the property for development. Alternately USDA might sell off the unused area for development, maybe a Trump hotel and putting green.

If you agree with me, please notify/email your city councilmembers.

William Hatch

Fix the Mics

I attended the city council meeting on October 28. There were a few things I wanted to hear discussed:

- The proposed Engraving and Printing facility at Beltsville Agricultural Research Center
- The SC Maglev project
- The status of the MD-193 Greenbelt Road Streetscape Project

All of these projects will directly affect the City of Greenbelt.

However, I was unable to hear discussions because the microphones (at each councilmember's desk) seemed to be turned off or not working properly. Conversations cannot be followed when only every fourth word is audible.

In the future, council should make sure that citizens who take time and interest to attend the meetings can hear and participate in the meeting. Making sure all equipment is working properly and personal conversations are reserved for closed meetings.

Parasite, a Dark Comedy Thriller

While the film Harriet continues in the Pop-Up, Parasite will open the newly renovated main theater. Written and directed by South Korean director and screenwriter Bong Joon Ho, the film features uncomfortable subject matter, black humor and sudden mood shifts. In Parasite, he creates a dark comedy thriller that brings together two families. The Park family is the picture of aspirational wealth. The Kim Family is rich in street smarts but not much else. Whether by chance or fate, these two houses are brought together and the Kims sense a golden opportunity. Masterminded by college-aged Ki-woo, the Kim children expediently install themselves as tutor and art therapist to the Parks. Soon, a symbiotic relationship forms between the two families. When a parasitic interloper threatens the Kims' newfound comfort, a savage, underhanded battle for dominance breaks out, threatening to destroy the fragile ecosystem between the Kims and the Parks. Parasite had its world premiere at the 2019 Cannes Film Festival, where it became the first Korean film to win the Palme d'Or.

The Green Amendment

The Greenbelt Climate Action Network will meet on Wednesday, November 13 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Community Center, Room 114. The speaker will be Rabbi Nina Beth Cardin, who has spent over a decade working both nationally and locally to engage faith communities in the work of sustainability.

Over the past 50 years, several U.S. states and many nations around the world have codified the right to a healthy environment in their constitutions. This right is not yet recognized in American federal or Maryland state law. Cardin is now partnering with Waterkeepers Chesapeake to spearhead a campaign to create such a Maryland constitutional amendment.

Cardin's talk will be about the movement toward environmental constitutional protection, the status of this effort in Maryland, what the amendment can do and the challenges it faces.

The latter part of the evening will be spent on (a) identifying a local drawdown solution the group wants to focus on this year and (b) working on a county-level legislative campaign. Upcoming events will also be announced.

Women from St. Hugh's Make Pilgrimage to Graymoor Retreat

by Mary Moien

In early October, a number of members of St. Hugh's Catholic Church and others made a pilgrimage for a day of reflection at the Graymoor Retreat House and Motherhouse of the Franciscan Sisters of the Atonement on the Hudson River in Garrison, New York. Cindy Perry, a member of St. Hugh's parish, serves as the President of the Women's Retreat League of the Archdiocese of Washington and the League sponsored this trip.

This mountain retreat was the site of the foundation of this order of sisters a century ago. The original chapel and other buildings are still standing. While there, participants had time to discuss issues surrounding all people's responsibility for the care of the earth and its human and other inhabitants. There was also time for silent reflection and special services celebrating the feast day of Saint Francis of Assisi.

The Sisters of the Atonement also sponsor lay associates. After a period of learning and discernment, lay associates who are accepted into the Society of the Atonement are making a commitment to live their lives in a manner consistent with the charisma (power) of this particular Franciscan order. The charisma of the Society of the Atonement focuses on serving the poor, living simply and working toward unity (at-one-ment) among Christian churches. Ellen Hanyok, JoAnn McCarthy, Kathleen McFarland, Cindy Perry and Mary Ann Tretler, all St. Hugh parishioners, had already become lay associates. Two additional parish members, JoEllen Sarff and Betty Triplett, were inducted as lay associates during this visit.

The aim of the retreat league is to provide programs and activities that help its members grow in personal holiness. The league meets monthly at the Washington Retreat House in Washington, D.C., a facility of the Sisters of the Atonement.

difference early in the evening. "During the last election," he said, "I couldn't even find a parking spot." This year, he second-guessed whether he was in the right place or not.

Richard D. Elliott of Bowie described the scene, saying "Anxious, civically-minded folks are waiting for election results two hours after polls have closed with no indication of what will happen."

As the wait for results approached two hours, the initial enthusiasm appeared to dwindle. People retreated to the chairs on either side of the room and any outstanding conversation concerned one topic: the results, and what was taking them so long.

Finally at 10:15, the screens on all four televisions in the room began flashing the final results. Life re-entered the room, and Byrd's supporters were visibly moved by the candidate's success.

Jordan took to the podium to address the crowd and congratulate the day's winners. Leta Mach took a moment to acknowledge the "very civil campaigns" led in Greenbelt, acknowledging a contradiction with those in other, more contentious areas of the country. Rodney Roberts and Davis also spoke before Byrd took the stage to give a few brief remarks. He profusely thanked his parents, campaign staff, and everyone who has supported him during his last two years in office.

After the crowd had dissipated, Byrd spoke to the News Review about his reaction to the win. He said, "My reaction is I'm just humbled and grateful to have the support of so many Greenbelters this evening. I'll try to do what I've tried to do for the last two years. Of course, with this added leadership capacity, I'll try to be extraordinarily respectful of all of my colleagues. I think [they all] have their strengths, and I'll try to make sure we capitalize on those strengths so we can get the best possible outcomes for the people of Greenbelt as we work on the many challenges that face the city, not just the next two years, but for years to come.

"We need to make Greenbelt a city that works for eight-year-olds and 80-year-olds. It has to be one where the people's voices are heard. I'll try to continue that work each and every day and improve upon that. Not only in terms of daily operations but in terms of the long-term visions that I think will be ideal for the residents that we represent."

He continued, "I appreciate that each of my colleagues has been gracious in their remarks. I have learned a great deal over the last two years. I'm committed to continuing to learn and not only learning but also applying what I learned. It is special to me, having grown up here in Greenbelt."

The 43rd city council will be sworn in next Monday, November 11.

Election 2019

Low Election Voter Turnout Doesn't Dampen Spirits

by Fatemeh Paryavi

Throughout the November 5 election day, clerks and judges at the various precincts around town anticipated a lower voter-turnout rate this year as opposed to two years ago, given only one challenger, along with the seven incumbents, was running.

Voter turnout at the five Greenbelt precincts was low but morale remained high as the day wore on.

Precinct 3 Election Clerk Sandra Hamlin said that there are currently over 13,000 registered voters in Greenbelt, including nearly 3,000 registered voters in Precinct 3, historically the heaviest voting precinct in Greenbelt. Though there were nearly 700 voters (excluding early voters) in this precinct who voted on election day two years ago, she anticipated a lower turnout this year. Adding early and absentee votes, 870 Precinct 3 voters voted in the last election.

In Precinct 6, which has almost 2300 registered voters, voting was held at the Police Station. By around 11 a.m., 140 people had voted and Election Judge Keith Chernikoff said that about 400 votes were expected by the end of the day. In 2017, 679 voters voted in person at Precinct 6 and 152 voted early or absentee. (The initial voting results reported by the city are of the individual votes cast for each candidate. Each voter can cast as many as seven votes, one for each councilmember. The number of actual voters is, of course, significantly lower than the total votes cast. For example, in the 2017 city council elections, out of 13,597 registered voters, 2,569 individual voters cast 14,077 votes for the seven councilmembers.)

Precinct 8 voting was held at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Though there were no voters seen coming in at noon, the election clerks stated that there had been a "normal streaming" of voters. In 2017, a total of only 223 people from Precinct 8 voted in person, early or absentee.

At Precinct 13, where voting was held in the Greenbriar Community Building, Election Judge Warren Wilcox said that 81 people had come in to vote by about 12:15 p.m. He continued that "It's awful slow today, I'm guessing only a couple hundred people may end up coming here to vote today." In 2017, 258 went to the polls to vote while 33 voted early or absentee.

For the first time, the polling place for Precinct 18 was at Schrom Hills Park. As of about 12:30 p.m., Election Judge Therese Benedik said that 74 people had voted. "This is my first time working this precinct so it's hard to compare," she said. Benedik also said that there had been many enthusiastic voters coming in. In 2017, 254 voters from Precinct 18 came to the polls and 100 voted early or absentee.

This year as opposed to two years ago, election clerks and judges have noticed more early voting in their respective precincts. Hamlin mentioned that about one-third of Precinct 3 voters voted early this year.

Chernikoff noted that in Precinct 6 "we also had a little bit higher early voting."

Benedik said that in her precinct, there had been 79 early voters but the total of early voters for all precincts was 445.

Hamlin said that registered voters do not need a photo ID to vote, but need to give their name and address in order to verify they are in the correct precinct. Once a voter's name has been checked off as registered, the voter verifies their name, address and date of birth on a card. After signing the card, the election clerk and judge initial the card.

After voting, voters had the opportunity to complete the bi-annual city questionnaire. The questionnaire can also be completed online (see greenbelt-md.gov/community/greenbelt-community-questionnaire-2019) or in the News Review. Completed questionnaires can be dropped off at the Municipal Building or mailed to Community Questionnaire, City of Greenbelt, 25 Crescent Road, Greenbelt, MD 20770.

whole neighborhoods, Eisenberg said.

Greenbelt, a planned New Deal community, was also segregated, but Eisenberg said this fact was not recorded in the original property records for Greenbelt.

Holland-Moore said that racially restrictive covenants might not be familiar to everyone.

“This is something that some people just don’t know about. I always kind of knew about it. It was something my grandparents talked about, something my parents talked about. For me, being African American, it was something we talked about. We know. We knew,” Holland-Moore said.

Megan Searing Young, director of the Greenbelt Museum, said the lecture was part of the museum’s efforts to document local African American history.

“Since 2012, which was the city’s 75th anniversary, we have been intent on collecting as much African American history as we can,” Searing Young said.

“If people come visit and leave not understanding that, yes, this was a utopian experiment and a model of modern town planning, but only for white families, then we haven’t told them the whole story,” Searing Young said.

Councilmember Judith Davis said the lecture would leave audience members reflecting on Greenbelt’s history.

“People like to think Greenbelt was born out of great ideas, but it wasn’t. It was the federal government saying ‘oh we’re not going to allow any folks of color,’” Davis said. “There was one person of color in Greenbelt when it was founded: a maid whose residential situation was unclear.”

Councilmember Colin Byrd said that learning about the moral missteps in the past could help inform decision making in the present. But Byrd also said it is important not to engage in excessive presentism when judging the standards of the past. He added, “Part of getting better is taking steps forward and not taking steps back at the same time.”

“I’ve always been more alarmed by movements and individuals that were exceptionally racist even for their time, and engaged in deeds that were exceptionally racist for their time,” said Byrd, who is the second African American elected to the Greenbelt City Council.

The Farmers Market Displays Bright Bounties of Autumn

by Cathie Meetre

“Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness, Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun.” Or so wrote John Keats in 1819 of a rural English autumn – as it turned out, almost his last. He died from tuberculosis little more than a year later at the age of 25. Two hundred years later, the season of harvest remains a culminating time in a farm family’s life. The risk and hope of sowing fields of corn or wheat, potatoes or sugar beets in the spring has, for good or ill, come to fruition. The fields are stubble, with a few hopeful birds swooping and scratching for the last grains of the season. The cycle is complete.

In our modern grocery stores, we have lost that sense of harvest and of the direct connection to food – the fruitfulness and ripening ready for our fall and winter tables – because our food now ripens around the globe (or in giant warehouses in an industrial zone). It is freighted to us from far away. After all, it’s always summer somewhere. But sunshine can’t be frozen or canned, and ripe just isn’t the same without it.

Enter the Greenbelt Farmers Market. Its farmers too are winding down in the shorter days and the sparser late plantings of fall. Back again are some of those early vegetables that like the cooler days – another round of leafy greens – and brussels sprouts, those engaging miniature globes that bobble along the plant’s stalks so improbably. The flowers, the vibrant zinnias, bow out graceful to the last, punctuated with a late burst of yellow intensity as the sunflowers try to compensate for the retiring sun. The mushrooms prevail imperishable (and oh, that mushroom soup).

A person might well remark, “Oh, My Gourd” to see some of the gaily-adorned little table-sized varieties, not to mention bigger gourds transformed into decorated birdhouses. And for sure there is no shortage of pumpkins for carving and pies, table decorations and every creative purpose under the Halloween heavens.

Perhaps a word is due on apples. New varieties and old friends come at this time of year. If nothing else would tempt someone to the market, it’s the formidable range of russet through green to gold of colors and flavors crisply stacked ready for eating, for pies, for cobblers, for crumbles and for that good old standby – the simple baked apple. Stop by and just sniff the perfumed air – it’s hard to resist. Move over peaches. Give way strawberries – you’ll get another turn next year. For now, hot cider, mulled with cinnamon and cloves and graced with a zest of orange and lemon, is the tippie of choice.

But there’s not a long time left to enjoy the market. It too will slip into the winter sleep – hibernating until next May and a new Mother’s Day opening. The last market is always the Sunday before Thanksgiving (this year that’s November 24) followed by the single celebration of the Holiday Market, which is always timed to coincide with the City’s Festival of Lights Arts and Crafts

Delegate Washington Hosts Ice Cream Social for Schools

by Elena Macias

Parents, teachers and students of Prince George's County schools braved the rainy weather on the evening of October 22 to attend an ice cream social event with Delegate Alonzo T. Washington and Dr. Monica Goldson, CEO of Prince George's County Public Schools.

The event was held at Yogi Castle in Hyattsville where dozens of guests filled the small frozen yogurt establishment to capacity with a few people wedged just in front of the entrance doors while those early attendees were able to snag seats and enjoy their ice cream comfortably. Within the first 30 minutes, the guests had exhausted the limit of ice cream Delegate Washington had purchased for those who decided to attend.

Questions and concerns about schools were taken by both Washington and Goldson. From unsavory bathroom conditions to special educational classes to getting an auditorium and turf fields to the amount of homework that honor students receive, nothing was off limits during this social event. But the major concern among parents, an issue that was consistently brought up throughout the event, was about transportation.

One Greenbelt resident in attendance brought up her worries about the topic and her frustrations with the lack of help from government officials. Goldson acknowledged the issue and assured the parent that they are examining strategies to fix this problem and are currently in the process of hiring more drivers for bus routes. Goldson even mentioned meeting with Montgomery County Transportation staff to find out how they have successfully handled transportation for their schools. With the upcoming winter weather, it's even more imperative that transportation issues get sorted out.

"It's a revolving door so I will continue to do hiring until we're able to fill those routes," said

Goldson. "So just know we're working quickly to try to make sure we're resolving [the issue]."

Questions were asked about Greenbelt students being placed in Parkdale High School instead of Eleanor Roosevelt High School and Goldson explained that it is based on the student addresses and projected enrollment over a 10-year period.

"We will be engaging in a comprehensive analysis of boundaries over the next year which analyzes all of our secondary school boundaries and make recommendations on how we can address our overcrowding in some schools and under enrollment in others," said Goldson.

Washington was adamant that everyone's concerns be solved sooner rather than later. The ice cream social event was just the beginning for Washington and Goldson who are both eager to begin preparations for better transportation and renovations for schools like Parkdale to get the upgrades it needs. But for any of that to happen, more financial assistance from the government is required.

"You know, we only get about six billion now in school aid and our school systems have about $46 billion budget in a state that's very small," said Washington, "but we can do much better. That's why we're taking this extra step to use all our political will to make this happen. And we can only do it with people like you."

Mosaic Workshop Creates Beauty, Recycles Beads

Sixty-nine people turned out to make mosaics out of recycled objects on November 3 in the Community Center. The drop-in art workshop run by Artist-in-residence Rachel Cross used old beads, CDs, broken jewelry and other odd pieces, which were donated by another 70 people. Attendees fashioned circular mosaics that will go on display in the Community Center in the winter. The next community art drop-in will be during the Festival of Lights, Sunday, December 8 from 1 to 3 p.m.

all of Greenbelt as it affects all the streams. They are seeking funding and are working with both UMD and The Chesapeake Bay Trust.

"The three GHI rain gardens at 20 Court Ridge Road, 6 Court Plateau Place and 33 Court Ridge Road will be continually maintained," said Taylor, by GHI Maintenance, volunteers and a caretaker program with the GHI Woodlands Committee. Taylor added, "We love the idea of collaboration." These gardens provide many environmental benefits, including the collecting and filtering of storm water, and the mitigation of soil erosion and source pollution, as well as "simply being so beautiful," said Councilmember Judith Davis.

The group is also focused on educating the community on the challenges of storm water maintenance. According to Duncan, the storm water swale system, (a swale is a shallow channel with gently sloping sides sometimes used to manage rain runoff) built in 1937, is largely damaged but with some of it still evident, predominantly due to lawn landscaping and the planting of trees. Taylor remarked on renovations and modifications to the GHI Manual to inform residents on how to preserve the swales. A recent grant led to a "wonderful activity book for 3rd to 5th graders on storm water management," said Taylor. They have also reached out to local schools and community youth groups, as well as CHEARS, in order to educate people on sustainability of storm water systems.

In regards to Beaverdam Creek, a large discussion centered on the proposed moving of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP) to the grounds of the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC). While BEP has stated that they plan to address any issues concerning storm and waste water, the facility could discharge 50,000 gallons a day into the creek. Barnett expressed a concern that "while they (BEP) say a lot of things, we don't know what that means," as far as the future impact of all that discharge. Council was worried as well and asserted that they plan on getting more information at the next meetings with BARC and BEP. Councilmember Rodney Roberts said that "Beaverdam Creek and the Anacostia watersheds are the most impacted watersheds in the country."

Davis asked Rastaetter if CCRIC could provide a report on the status of the recently installed Stream Valley Trail and the stage and environmental impact of construction of the Sunnyside Bridge. Rastaetter emphasized that Indian Creek has a "scope larger than Greenbelt," as it impacts Beltsville as well.

Duncan expressed disappointment at the condition of Still Creek, saying that nothing's changed. He feared the proposed construction of a Royal Farms gas station in the vicinity along Greenbelt Road, saying its impact on Still Creek is a bad change and nothing good is going to happen. He was positive about the new bridge being constructed at Greenbelt Park that will allow the stream to run unencumbered underneath it, something he had advocated for.

Concerning the P3 Clear Water Partnership (CWP), with which the county has a 30-year contract to improve storm water infrastructure, Jordan and Councilmember Edward Putens were eager for the watershed groups to form a relationship with them on future projects. Jordan commented that "CWP's efforts seem very beneficial and they do things Greenbelt can't afford to do," adding that he would "try to persuade them to do as much as they can."

Dr. Alvin Thornton Will Speak To E. & F. Roosevelt Democrats

by Konrad Herling

Anybody interested in the current state and future of Prince George's County Public Schools should add Friday, November 15 at 7:30 p.m. to their calendar and come to the Greenbriar Community Building at 7600 Hanover Parkway to hear their concerns addressed. The Eleanor & Franklin Roosevelt Democratic Club keynote speaker will be Dr. Alvin Thornton, chair of the Board of Education of Prince George's County Public Schools.

During the 2019 State Legislative session, Thornton worked with Senator Paul Pinsky and the State Legislature to put together a blueprint for future plans and funding of education in Maryland. It was known as Kirwan Lite. Pinsky wrote the following in his description of Kirwan Lite: "This put the concepts of the blueprint (of Maryland's funding of the state's education) in place and funding for the first couple of years. It anticipates the successful passage of the whole proposal in 2020, including funding to underwrite the costs." Funding, at least in part, is derived from casinos, something Maryland voters required in the 2018 election. For more in-depth information, readers may wish to search online for the terms Kirwan Commission and Kirwan Lite.

The successful blueprint for greater funding for our area schools was consistent with what County Executive Angela Alsobrooks stated when choosing Thornton for the chair of the Board of Education. "Dr. Thornton brings with him a wealth of institutional knowledge with his extensive background in both education and education finance."

Stories from the Archives

Consumer Co-op Countered Inaccuracies, Scrutiny in 1940s

by Deanna Dawson

Seventy-five years ago, Greenbelt Consumer Services, Inc. (GCS) and the Greenbelt Co-operator responded to an article by Martha Strayer in the Washington Daily News – Not All is Green Pastures in Greenbelt: Utopia's in a Turmoil Over Co-Ops Vs. Chain Stores – that made several incorrect assertions about Greenbelt and its cooperatives. Concerned about the wide circulation of the Washington Daily News, GCS ran a full-page ad (Strayer Goes Astray) in the September 22, 1944 issue of the Cooperator, presenting facts to clarify, for members and patrons, 15 inaccuracies in the article, which referred to “Government monopoly co-ops” and to GCS as “the Government-financed cooperative” and overstated the salaries of some GCS employees, among other things. A page 2 editorial stated that “any reporter of the Cooperator who turned in a story so full of mistakes in fact, so garbled in context, and so filled in rumor and editorial opinion would be summarily dismissed from the staff, short of help though we are.” The editorial further noted that Greenbelt had lived through a “barrage of misrepresentation in the early days of its history when it was regarded in some quarters as fair game for political attacks.”

Response to these 1944 allegations may have been good practice for what lay ahead, when GCS and other cooperatives came under the scrutiny of the House Small Business Subcommittee in 1947. The investigation was planned “to ascertain whether, and to what extent, tax-exempt privileges of cooperatives are harmful to free competitive enterprise.” Committee Chair Walter Ploeser (R-Missouri) told reporters that the inquiry would “open the eyes of the American people to socialistic trends in America.” During the two-day hearing, dozens of Greenbelters crowded the Capitol Hill hearing room to support GCS, ready to respond to the charges.

Articles about the House subcommittee hearings were published in the Cooperator on August 22 and 29 of 1947. tember 1954, when the paper was renamed Greenbelt News Review, have recently been scanned by a University of Maryland Libraries contractor as part of the Greenbelt Archive Project, and should be posted online in early 2020. In the meantime, interested readers are referred to page 156 of Chapter 5, Utopia in Transition by Keith Winsell, in Greenbelt: History of a New Town, 1937 – 1987 (1987, Mary Lou Williamson, general editor). To read the Washington Daily News article, which is not available online, contact newsreview.archive@gmail.com.

Deanna Dawson is coordinator of the Greenbelt Archive Project. Elisabeth Kevorkian “found” Greenbelt’s response to the inaccuracies while collecting headlines for GAP’s headline database.

Archive Project Update

New digital papers from 1985 through 1987 are being uploaded this week to the Internet Archive collection that already includes News Reviews from 1964 through 1984 (see archive.org/details/greenbelt-news-review). Both the city and the News Review celebrated their 50th anniversary in 1987, and the paper reported on special events that occurred throughout the year and included many articles on the city’s history and reminiscences from original residents and News Review staffers.

During these years Greenbelters increasingly became concerned about saving what was left of the green belt and other open space, although the decision to “acquire more forest vs. build an indoor pool” debate had started. Another developer’s proposal to build houses on Parcel 1, in what is now the Forest Preserve, pushed action from the city council and a front-page headline in the December 31, 1987, issue of the News Review announced “City Council Votes to Acquire Parcel 1,” ending 1987 on a high note.

Bright, colorful paintings grace the walls of Cedars of Lebanon.

A reception for the artists whose works are currently on display at Cedars of Lebanon restaurant is scheduled for Sunday, November 17, from 3 to 5 p.m. This exhibit is the second in the continuing series of art shows provided by Cornucopia Arts. This exhibit includes 29 art objects representing a broad variety of styles and mediums by 10 area artists, one from Beltsville, three from Laurel and six from Greenbelt. All of the artists will be present at the reception and available to discuss their works of art. The works will also be available for sale.

Cornucopia Arts is self-described as a loose confederation of unaffiliated and very independent artists, many of whom are residents of Greenbelt. The free-spirited nature of Cornucopia's band of artists combines with a high level of enthusiasm and passion for coming together for the advancement of the arts. Normally an exhibit can be assembled in about a month with not much more than a phone call to each artist, art work selection by the coordinator, and delivery and hanging at the exhibit site. Cornucopia's artist family could be likened to the minutemen of 1775 except that they are minute men and ladies armed with paintings, etc.

Cornucopia Arts is not a formal organization with fees, dues and meetings. The coordinator has two basic rules.

1. Cooperation with reasonable requests: i.e. choosing show entries, helping out with hanging if possible and support for the event. People want to meet the artists.

2. Art Quality: Cornucopia maintains a higher level of art accomplishment. But don't let that stop you from asking. Let the coordinator decide if your art will fit the show's standard. The coordinator has disqualified some of his own works for not being good enough to show.

November Art Share

Local artists are invited to meet up on Friday, November 15 from 7 to 8 p.m. in Room 113 of the Community Center. This event is for teens and adults. Bring one to three pieces in any medium and join in a constructive and informal discussion of everyone's work. All experience levels are welcome.
