Food Store Theft Shocks Greenbelt

Saturday morning at 6:30 a.m. Gwendolyn Nelson opened the Co-op Food Store. It was the day after a holiday, and Thursday, the day before the holiday, had been particularly busy. But now Memorial Day was over, and this promised to be a busy day, too. And hot, besides. Thinking of the long day ahead, she walked up the narrow stairway to the cubbyhole office to start the daily routine. At 6:38 a.m., she saw the safe, gaping open, empty. The day became busy all at once.

First she called food store Manager Lloyd Lovaas, who in turn, called the county police switchboard. (The Greenbelt Police Switchboard is closed from midnight to 8 a.m. as a result of an economy measure adopted at last December's budget hearings, although an officer is on duty during these hours. All police calls during those hours must go to the county switchboard, which relays the call by radio to the Greenbelt Patrol Car and to County Police.)

Meanwhile, in the store below, one of the clerks called Greenbelt Police Officer Joe O'Laughlin, on duty in the center at the time. He arrived at the scene in minutes, and after ascertaining the facts, called Police Chief Jim Williams.

At 7:30 a.m. Lovaas called GCS Controller Bob Morrow, to inform him of the robbery. The amount of money which had been left in the safe on Thursday was carefully calculated. It came to slightly more than $13,000. Since the amount involved more than $5,000, Morrow instructed Lovaas to notify the FBI. Four agents came out to conduct an investigation.

At 6 p.m. Friday evening, Lovaas had entered the Food Store to check the refrigerators, a routine precaution to forestall any malfunction which could spoil thousands of dollars worth of frozen foods. In the course of his inspection he also checked the office, noted that the safe was secure, and automatically checked his wrist watch against the electric clock plugged into the wall near the safe.

At 11 p.m. Officer Joe O'Laughlin of the Greenbelt Police Dept., on foot patrol in the center area, checked the doors of the Food Store to make sure they were locked. Through the window he could see the light in the office, a light which is always left on for just this purpose. Nothing wrong, he proceeded on his rounds. During the course of the evening, he had noted eight strange cars in town, a trick of observation which develops as a habit in all policemen on routine patrols.

At 2:30 a.m. two teen-age youths, standing at the center and discussing life, saw a light colored, late model car with Virginia tags, drive down Crescent, swing around in front of the firehouse and into the parking lot behind the food store. They thought nothing of it at the time, but reported it to the police the following morning after the burglary became a matter of general knowledge.

Again at 4 a.m. O'Loughlin checked the doors of the food store. At this point, the police surmise, his rattling of the door must have scared the burglars off. Their reasoning is based on the following facts: there were two safes in the office, one a "maximum security" type, the other a smaller and less complicated model sitting on top of the first; the thieves evidently tackled the harder safe first; they must have disconnected the electric clock in order to plug in their electric drill, because the clock was stopped at 2:55 a.m.; it probably took about 45 or 50 minutes to crack the first safe, after which they started on the second; at 4 a.m. they were within minutes of breaking into the second safe, but the sight of Officer O'Loughlin at the door must have persuaded them to leave; why else would they have left when only two more minutes of drilling would have cracked the second safe?

As a result of the theft, Morrow disclosed, the Co-op is restudying its check cashing policies. Formerly, he said, the store made it a practice to have enough surplus cash on hand to accommodate those customers who wanted to cash their checks. Since Thursday was the day before a holiday, there was even more cash on hand than usual.

"We would like to serve our patrons as much as possible," said Morrow, "but we have a responsibility to our stockholders to protect their money, and large amounts of money are tempting targets." Although the loss was fully covered by insurance, he added, this does not absolve us from our responsibility. As a matter of fact, the insurance rates are governed by experience, and the premiums could very likely be increased to compensate for the loss over a period of time. He indicated that in the future, while check cashing service would continue to be provided, it would be governed by the amount of money actually taken in by the store in the course of a business day, rather than from surplus funds. "We must reduce our cash exposure," he concluded, "in order to minimize the risk."

Greenbelt Police Chief Jim Williams said the fire exit above the bowling alley had been pried open from the outside to gain entry to the store. The burglar alarm did not go off. The entire operation had all the earmarks of professional criminals, with ample indications that the job had been well scouted in advance.

"This is probably the largest theft in the history of Greenbelt," said Williams, "and perhaps because of it, our citizens and our merchants will become more alert and take greater care to protect their property." The fact that no serious thefts have occurred in the past has contributed to a general laxity in this respect, and Williams indicated that policemen have more than once, in the course of their routine patrols, discovered that the doors of the various business establishments have inadvertently been left open at night. This applies also to the homes of vacationing residents and to the homes of people who are only out for an evening, to say nothing of all the automobiles left unlocked each night. Chief Williams urged that all citizens make a habit of locking up when they leave their homes, and locking their cars when not in use.

While the police and the FBI are checking out a number of clues, including fingerprints at the scene of the crime, Williams urged anyone who noticed strangers at the center on Thursday or Friday, or who noted the presence of out-of-town cars in the area, or who saw anything at all to arouse their suspicion, to get in touch with him at the police station. Cases such as this are frequently broken, he explained, by clues provided by casual observers, and it is entirely possible that someone may remember something he saw which could prove to be a vital key in solving this one.

Meanwhile, the Co-op has already taken steps to prevent further incidents of this kind. The safe has been installed under a spotlight in the front window, where it is in plain view of all passersby. This, together with other security measures, should make it much easier for the police to check periodically and much more difficult for thieves to crack it unseen. If the other merchants in town would take similar precautions, said Williams, it would greatly reduce the element of risk involved in leaving sums of money on the premises.

TROOP 746

As part of the Boy Scouts of America 1958 Safety Good Turn program, the safety conscious Boy Scouts of Troop 746, sponsored by the Mowatt Memorial Methodist Church, will exchange frayed and old worn-out electric extension cords for NEW ones, as public service, for the first 400 adults who bring their old cords to the Safety Table which will be set up outside the CO-OP supermarket on Saturday, June 7 starting at 10 a.m.

CORRECTION

Through our error the Greenbelt Pharmacy ad appearing in last week's News Review incorrectly gave the special price on $1.98 double-edged razor blades as 5c. The price should have been given as 59c. The new drugstore is offering enticing bargains (see this week's ad), but they're not quite giving away merchandise.

THANKS

Many thanks to the Greenbelt Rescue Squad for the excellent attention when our family was in need.
