Recollections on My First Week as the City's Manager

by James Giese

It was the week before Christmas 43 years ago that I first arrived in Greenbelt as its fourth city manager. A week earlier I had been offered the job and accepted. I proposed starting after the first of the year but Mayor Francis White and Councilmember Dave Champion, who had flown to Illinois to interview my references and then offered the job to me, insisted that I start right away as they felt my presence was sorely needed. (It wasn't.) As a then unemployed bachelor I was pretty flexible. Still I had to arrange to have my things moved and find a place in Greenbelt in which to put them.

The deal worked out was that I would start work on Monday, December 19, stay a week, then go back to the Midwest for Christmas and New Year's and return on January 2. Not bad to get a week's paid vacation after working only a week.

I arrived in Greenbelt on Sunday and arranged for a room at a motel in College Park. (The motel is still there but now part of a chain and greatly enlarged so as to be unrecognizable as to what it once was.) That afternoon, the council arranged a reception for me at the Greenbelt Youth Center with key city employees. All the department heads were there: Superintendent of Public Works Albert S. "Buddy" Attick, City Treasurer Mabel Kandler, Acting Police Chief Marshall "Bud" Zoellner and Recreation Superintendent James Wooldridge. Buddy Attick and Mabel Kandler had been serving as co-managers during the interim since Charles T. McDonald had retired as city manager. It was agreed that first thing Monday Buddy would give me a tour of the city and a chance to meet the rest of the employees.

Before I came to Greenbelt, I was not aware that the city council was divided on many issues. The town was particularly divided over what to do about replacing Jim Williams as police chief. He had taken a job in the Southwest. As one of his last acts, "Mr." McDonald (few addressed him

Legion Honors Survivors Of Pearl Harbor Attack

by Carol Griffith

"When I later went to look at the ship, I was horrified to see that bombs had hit the same spot in which I had been sitting and eating earlier." This was part of the riveting keynote address given by Winfield J. Lewis, a World War II veteran and Pearl Harbor survivor, at Greenbelt American Legion Post #136's "Special Honor to WWII Pearl Harbor Survivors" tribute. The program was part of their National Security/Foreign Relations (NSFR) and Homeland Security (HS) Forum held at the Post on December 7. This day marked the 64th anniversary of the Japanese attack on the base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on December 7, 1941.

Lewis, who recently moved to Catonsville from New York to be closer to family, began his speech by thanking the American Legion for inviting him. He told of being assigned to the USS Pennsylvania, which was in drydock at Pearl Harbor on the day it was attacked in 1941. He said it was a "gorgeous Sunday morning" as he stood outside when the flag was raised. Then he noticed loud noises and clouds of black smoke and shortly thereafter a plane flew directly overhead with the Japanese symbol on it.

Lewis went to his battle station and there first heard of the attack. During a lull he went on deck to sit and eat but was soon sent on a detail away from the ship. When he returned he was "shocked to death" to see that the Pennsylvania had been hit and he was "very upset" that the ship had suffered 30 to 40 casualties. Lewis remained with the ship for about a month until it was sent to San Francisco. He was discharged from the Navy in 1945. Lewis has since returned twice to Pearl Harbor, once participating in a ceremony commemorating the 40th anniversary of the attack. Following his speech, he was presented with a plaque and certificate of appreciation for serving as keynote speaker by Department Commander Philip

In Greenhills, a Village Redevelops Itself

Aging Inner Suburb Builds New, Upscale Homes

(This article is reprinted with permission from the August 12, 2005, issue of "The Cincinnati Enquirer.")
by Steve Kemme, Enquirer Staff Writer

GREENHILLS – From his front porch, Tom Barth likes what he sees.

Across the street, four new houses sporting big front porches and carriage houses in back sit where old, deteriorating, termite-infested apartment buildings once were. The new houses – one has already sold – are priced from $250,000 to $322,000.

"It's a big improvement," says Barth, who has lived on Damon Road for 31 years. "We're tickled to death with the aesthetics."

These four houses, built by Potterhill Homes of Milford, are a milestone for Greenhills and may inspire other older communities struggling to attract residents.

Greenhills, one of the original three planned greenbelt communities in the United States, has embarked on a unique initiative to improve its housing.

Tired of waiting for developers to come to the rescue, Greenhills decided to take the unusual step of becoming its own developer.

The four homes are the first to be built in Greenhills' innovative redevelopment program. Potterhill Homes will build 12 more in the development, called DeWitt Landing. They'll be priced in the low $200,000 range.

"We feel this is a great opportunity to redevelop and reinvent Greenhills the way it was intended to be," Mayor Oscar Hoffman said.

A few years ago, Greenhills, a village of about 4,000 residents, wrestled with a dilemma a lot of Hamilton County's older suburban communities face.

Much of its older housing stock had become deteriorating rental property, and it had no large vacant tracts for new housing. Private developers showed little inclination to buy the run-down houses and improve them.

"We were losing residents to Butler and Clermont counties because we didn't have any new homes," said Municipal Manager David Moore.

So Greenhills bought clusters of run-down multifamily homes, rehabbed them and either rented or sold them. It tore down the ones that were too dilapidated to rehab.

Greenhills has spent $3.6 million so far on buying houses and rehabbing or tearing them down. The village has financed this redevelopment program through borrowed money and a $1 million bond issue that Greenhills voters approved last November.

Property sales have generated more than $800,000 for the village so far. That money was reinvested in acquiring and rehabbing more property. Rent money is used for maintaining buildings, tearing down and rehabbing buildings and paying for village employee costs.

"I had some questions about it at first," Barth said, "because it's a lot of money for the village to put out. But it seems like a win-win for everybody."

Paying for itself

The income from rent and new tax revenues will more than pay the village's costs, Hoffmann said.

"We haven't put ourselves in harm's way" he said. "We've been successful so far."

Greenhills has bought 25 multi-family buildings and one single-family home for a total of 110 housing units. It will buy more as money allows and property becomes available.

Tom Moeller, Madeira city manager and chairman of a consortium of Hamilton County's older suburban communities, said a few communities have used the same redevelopment strategy Greenhills has, but none have done it on as large a scale.

"It's an idea that can help redevelop and revitalize a residential area," Moeller said. "If you can amass a lot of property and turn it into a large-scale project, it certainly makes sense."

Greenhills has the advantage of being surrounded by Winton Woods and having an abundance of parks and green space.

In fact, Greenhills was one of three greenbelt communities the federal government created in the 1930s.

"It's a beautiful community, with the greenbelt all around it," said Carolyn Rolfes, president of Potterhill Homes, which was one of three developers to bid for the project.

She has strong emotional ties to Greenhills. Her grandparents were among the first residents of Greenhills, and her father grew up there.

"It's neat that Greenhills is taking the initiative to redevelop their own community," Rolfes said.

The area that Greenhills has targeted for rehab is a section the federal government built more cheaply than others. Over the years, some neglectful landlords accelerated the deterioration of this housing, which resembles military barracks, Moore said.

Of 296 housing units in the more cheaply built federal housing, only 26 are owner-occupied, he said.

Greenhills' redevelopment plan isn't designed to replace old houses with new $1 million mansions. The village wants to create a mix of housing that appeals to young families as well as empty-nesters and the elderly.

Hoffmann lives in the federally built house he grew up in. He has one of the few owner-occupied homes in his neighborhood.

"We're trying to reverse the trend of people moving in and out every two years and watching the property decline," Hoffman said.

"We're all interested in improving Greenhills and maintaining the kind of community we grew up in."

Greenbelt Communities

In the last half of the 1930s, the federal government decided to build three experimental greenbelt communities as a contrast to the urban environments many Americans were living in and to create jobs.

Greenhills was one of those three communities. The other two were Greenbelt, Md., and Greendale, Wis. Greenhills officials say their community is the only one of the three that has retained its complete greenbelt. The village is surrounded by Winton Woods.

A 1985 Visit To Greenhills

In 1985 a group of Greenbelters including then-Mayor Gil Weidenfeld and then-City Manager Jim Giese, visited Greenhills, one of the other planned communities built during the Franklin Roosevelt administration. Below are some excerpts of the story of that trip from the December 19, 1985, issue of the News Review:

Eager to see their sister city, 13 Greenbelters traveled to Greenhills, Ohio, Sunday afternoon, November 17 following their two-day participation in the All-America Cities competition. Greenhills lies five miles north of Cincinnati, just inside the beltway.

First, one has to imagine Greenbelt as just the Greenbelt Homes community – no Boxwood or University Square, no Springhill Lake or Greenbelt East, in order to visualize the size of Greenhills. "You can stand on the highway and see the whole town," exclaimed Mayor Gil Weidenfeld.

Greenhills, with a population of less than 5,000 . . . [has] only one commercial establishment outside of the neighborhood shopping center," said Weidenfeld.

The houses are very similar in appearance to those in Greenbelt – that is, those that are still in or close to their original form. But here is one of the most striking differences. Substantial and varied modifications have been made over the years. New fronts, gable roofs (originals were almost all flat), porches, windows, additions and siding have changed a much larger number of the homes than has been the case here. "Our housing," says Greenbelt's City Manager James K. Giese, "is purer 1937 in spite of rehab."

The reason for the wide variations in the houses is the individual ownership of the units. Thus one row of four units may be held by one to four separate owners. Absentee landlords have sometimes been a problem, says [Town Administrator David] Moore. "We can't evict for unsightliness, only for health and safety," he explained.

As in Greenbelt, the smaller units attract smaller families who later move up to larger homes within the community.

The first newer housing was built during the late 40s – square, one-story, brick units, with basements just slightly larger than the original homes. The last group was added in the late 60s and is similar to Boxwood or new Lakeside houses, except for the price. They are selling for $80,000 to $90,000.

Local Constituents Petition Rep. Hoyer

Local members of the grassroots organization MoveOn.org Political Action urged Representative Steny Hoyer to support an Iraq exit strategy with an "Out in '06" petition delivered to his Greenbelt office.

This national campaign comes as political parties in Iraq, some Republicans and many Democrats in Congress support an exit strategy with a timeline.

Among the MoveOn.org members, Green-belter Ruth Kastner chided Hoyer for continuing to support the President. "More than 600 constituents" she said, "signed a petition to urge him to support an exit strategy."

County Animal Shelter Needs Cloth Bedding

GHI's Companion Animal Committee is seeking old blankets, towels and comforters for homeless animals housed at the county Animal Management Division's shelter. The committee has learned the facility is very low on bedding. Donations will help keep animals warm and off the concrete floor while they await adoption.

Last week's plea resulted in some donations but more are needed.

Items can be dropped off at the shelter, located at 8311 D'Arcy Road in Forestville, on Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Wednesday from 11:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. The shelter is closed Thursday and Sunday. Donations may also be left at the GHI office and will be delivered to the shelter by members of the Companion Animal Committee.

'Tis the season to be jolly and enjoy friends and good fellowship. This past year the Golden Age Club has enjoyed some great trips, pot luck luncheons, learned some new games and of course played bingo. The Wednesday meetings at the Community Center have been enjoyed by everyone and we have welcomed some new members.

Ellie Rimar, past president, has volunteered to chair the Activities Committee next year and would welcome suggestions for activities and speakers.

Our thoughts and prayers are with the Geiger family in the loss of Mary, beloved wife and mother.

"Project Heat Up" Offers Heating Help

Due to projected heating cost increases the state Office of Home Energy Programs has instituted a new program to help pay heating costs for some people whose income is above the eligibility limits for the low-income Maryland Energy Assistance Program (MEAP, also administered by the Office of Energy Programs). This specially funded program will operate from January 15 through March 31; whether or not the program will be in effect in the future is unknown at this time. Applicants will use the same application form for Project Heat Up used for MEAP and Electric Universal Service Program. Those who want to apply are asked to call Community Resource Advocate Christal Parker Batey at 301-474-8000 ext. 2012.

Maximum monthly income eligibility guidelines for the program are established according to household size: for an individual, gross income may not exceed $1,395.63. That base amount is adjusted for each additional household member by adding $475.42. There is no asset test. Additional information can be reviewed online at <http://www.dhr.state.md.us/meap>.

Family Tangle

In "The Squid and the Whale," at Old Greenbelt Theatre December 16 through 22, a 16-year-old son and his 12-year-old brother play out parental excesses when mother and father seek an amiable divorce. Set in an agreeable, highbrow enclave in 1986, the film is named for a battling diorama in Manhattan's Museum of Natural History across the river from the family's home in Brooklyn. Director Noah Baumbach, drawing on his own family history, shows a strong satirical bent along with an incisive eye. Carrying the complex day of mixed-up emotions are Jeff Daniels and Laura Linney as the couple, Jesse Eisenberg and Owen Kline as their sons and, cross-hatched with the parents, Anna Paquin as a student and William Baldwin as a tennis pro. Rated R, due to sexual blyplay and profanity. 81 minutes.

In Memoriam Mary Geiger

If we cherish goodness and seek to invoke it regularly, we learn to look for it and recognize it in others. Occasionally, a person embodies it so overwhelmingly that it cannot be mistaken for anything else.

Such a person was Mary Geiger. Her aura completely illuminated both her and those she touched, so that when you encountered her you always came away better for the visit. She found others to be special, perhaps not realizing how exceptional she was herself. She bathed us with her approval, which was really so easily earned, and withheld criticism and judgment except as it could be cited jokingly.

I was fortunate to know Mary, certainly not as well as many of you but enough to know that hatred and intolerance ran hiding when she approached. If you saw her love and kindness, you saw the face of God. We can keep her memory by exhibiting these traits ourselves. I will think of her every time I hear the words "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life . . ." Surely they did, Mary, and will follow your family and the many whose lives you touched who choose to act accordingly.

Community Church Holds Sunday Night Christmas Concert

On Sunday, December 18 at 7:30 p.m. Greenbelt Community Church will feature a Christmas concert by "Music Amongst Friends," a small classical ensemble dedicated to the high vocal arts. The program will include classics, carols and popular standards by world-class performers. Among these are the nationally recognized performers — pianist Muriel Bennett Balzer, soprano Gina Vikari Moore and baritone James K. Moore.

Earlier she studied in Turkey. She has coached opera and art song at The Teilart Center for Singing Synthesis with its Director Dr. Veronica Tyler.

Balzer has done extensive solo, chamber and accompanying work throughout the United States. For many years she was accompanist for international opera star Veronica Tyler. Balzer has been heard in concert halls throughout the country including Carnegie Hall and the Kennedy Center. She is the founder of and artistic director for "Music Amongst Friends" and a

Did you know?

There is a whole chapter in the Qur'an entitled "Mary" that describes the conception and birth of Jesus?

Muslims consider Jesus to be one of the greatest of God's messengers to mankind. His birth was miraculous and he also performed many miracles which verified the fact that he was Godly inspired.

Patriots

The program had opened with a prayer, presentation of colors and recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance, followed by a ceremony to recognize as "honored patriots" all POWs, MIAs and the victims of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. The touching ceremony ended with "Let us remember - and never forget their sacrifice. May God forever watch over them and protect them and their families."

Past National Commander and current Chairman of the Department (State of Maryland) NSFR and HS Commission, Clarence Bacon conducted the program. He recognized many honored guests including Boy Scout Troop 257 of College Park, which has several Eagle Scout candidates, and Jim Carothers, a member of Post #217 in College Park, who was aboard a battleship near the USS Missouri at the time of the Japanese surrender which ended World War II in the Pacific.

Also in attendance as part of the approximately 200 guests was Post #136 Commander John Osterfield and members of the American Legion Auxiliary and Sons of the American Legion. Osterfield read a Proclamation issued by President Bush on December 7 recognizing the more than 2,400 lives lost in the war against "two ruthless regimes" and commemorating the "honor, bravery and integrity" of those who fought in World War II.

Bacon acknowledged the efforts of Ric Santos, Greenbelt resident and member of Post #136, who had become National Commander of the American Legion shortly before September 11, 2001.

Following the events of that day, Santos had called together the leadership of the American Legion to map out the group's position and plan, much of which remains in effect today as American Legion Resolution 169: The War on Terrorism. Bacon noted that the American Legion is the only veterans' organization that works to support President Bush and his administration as they are engaged in the global war on terrorism and that the Department of Maryland is the most recognized of the 55 departments for efforts in the area of national security, foreign relations and homeland security.

or his predecessors in other than a formal manner) had appointed Zoellner as chief. Three members of council objected. While council had no say in the selection, White did ask the city solicitor whether the appointment was legal. Ed Smith, who a year later would be elected mayor of Greenbelt, ruled as city solicitor that Zoellner did not meet the qualifications set by the council for the position of chief in that he lacked a high school diploma. This left the city with no manager in charge and a police department without a leader.

As a result of a controversial meeting, the council agreed to the compromise appointment of Attick and Kandler as co-managers. They were then directed to put their heads together and appoint an acting police chief. However, the two could not agree and reached a stalemate. Attick broke the impasse by announcing to the council that Zoellner would serve as acting chief, squelching any objection by Kandler. At that time, the city police force, which provided around-the-clock service had an authorized strength of six, with two positions vacant.

The police chief vacancy was only one of a number of issues dividing the council and community at that time. I would devote much of my early days in Greenbelt trying to resolve them satisfactorily. However, in spite of this, the city government was functioning reasonably well and it was not necessary for me to take immediate action.

A Concert

Following the reception, the mayor invited me to his house for a family dinner and to then attend a choir concert at Greenbelt Community Church. At that time, there was little city activity relating to the holidays. There was no decorated tree in the center nor light poles wrapped with decorations. The center merchants did nothing to decorate their stores and there was no festival of lights. Nor were many homes decorated with lights as is now the case. The Christmas concert at the church, however, was one recognition of the holiday season and the church was well attended. I remember that when we left the church, a light snow was falling giving an air of Christmas and winter to the night.

We returned to the mayor's home on Lakeside Drive for a nightcap. In those days a number of the members of council enjoyed a drink or two – or three or four or more. The sober councils of today are a lot different from those of the old days.

Suddenly two neighbors walked in asking if anyone had a green Valiant parked outside. I had. They informed me that someone backed into the car, denting its fender and had left the scene. We all went out and took a look and sure enough, my fender was dented. The two led me on about my car being damaged by a hit and run driver for a long time but finally admitted that a guest at one of their homes had backed out of the drive while we were in church and left me their insurance information. Eventually I became fast friends with these two neighbors who enjoyed playing practical jokes, Leo Davis and George Neumann.

Tour of the City

On Monday I got my first real tour of the city. A lot has changed since then. The widening of Greenbelt Road into a divided four lanes was just being completed. Kenilworth Avenue ended as a divided four-lane road just north of Greenbelt Road where a temporary roadway carried traffic over to Edmonston Road. That temporary road is now used by Springhill Lake residents wanting to get onto Kenilworth southbound. Edmonston Road intersected with Crescent and then extended northward along its present route.

The Beltway had not been built then but construction had begun. Buddy took me in his Jeep with a fabric top up a gravel farm drive off Edmonston Road. As we crested a hill, we came upon a big hole in the ground. There workmen were erecting the concrete supports for the Kenilworth Avenue bridge over the Beltway.

A little distance away, another road leading to the west off Edmonston was being built. It was Springhill Drive. Back in the woods, the first Springhill Lake apartment buildings were being built.

Developers were trying to build a regional shopping center in Greenbelt. Three sites were being proposed and approval sought. One location is now the Golden Triangle office park. A second would have been at the corner of Crescent Road and Ridge Road occupying much of what is now park land and Boxwood Village. Sidney Brown however had the inside track in the race with the Beltway Plaza, which was to be the first enclosed regional mall in the metropolitan Washington area. His advantage was that his land was already zoned to permit a shopping center. However it would be many years before an enclosed mall was built.

When I first saw Beltway Plaza, there was a small row of stores anchored by an A&P food store at one end and a drug store at the other. This is the row of store fronts where Giant Food is, although the original grocery store has been replaced by a much larger one.

The rest of the shopping mall site was barren ground. At the east end was a steep hill up which ran a construction road. At the top was another hole in the ground in which concrete was being poured. That was the start of construction for the S. Klein of New York department store. The next week, while I was back home, a dirt wall collapsed and five workmen were killed.

Another Hill

Buddy took me on another trail into the woods off Edmonston Road. It went up a hill where there was an open clearing with a few headstones. This was the Greenbelt Cemetery operated by the city. It is still in use with new and improved access off of Ivy Lane west of Kenilworth.

Boxwood Village, Lakeside North, Charlestowne Village, Charlestowne North and the Golden Triangle were all undeveloped. A derelict building off Greenbelt Road where the Pepco substation at the Golden Triangle now is was all that remained of Toaping Castle, the family home of the pioneer

Walker family whose early members served in the Revolutionary War.

The homes on original Lakeside had been built for the most part. At the end of the road away from Crescent an extension was being constructed but was then a sea of mud. Along this new road and one leading off of it (the future Maplewood Court) houses were under construction. This was the new Lakeside being constructed by Charles Bresler and Burton Reiner. The city would have many an encounter with Bresler over the following years about development issues.

None of the development now there existed in Greenbelt East when I arrived. Goddard Space Center was surrounded by woodland. Where Eleanor Roosevelt High School now exists, there was an abandoned sand and gravel quarry. Where Hanover Parkway now exists south of Greenbelt Road there was an abandoned airport.

First Meeting

Monday night was the first formal council meeting I attended. The city offices were then located on the second floor of the Roosevelt Center building over what is now a mini mart on the left side of the mall as you face the Mother and Child statue. At the top of the stairway was a large room surrounded by smaller offices. One was my office. Others were used by the police department and it was not unusual for the police to drag an offender into the room on the way to their office while a meeting was taking place. Also, people would come to talk to the police dispatcher while meetings occurred. The council and staff gathered around a large table. That table is still in use in a Municipal Building meeting room.

I remember little about the meeting. There were only a few in the audience, but Champion told me later that three women there had come to check me out and that they were very influential in the town. I don't remember what was on the agenda, but I do remember the council arguing about what to do on a minor matter until I suggested that they let me handle it.

The rest of my first week in Greenbelt was spent getting acquainted and finding out what was going on. It was, as I recall, uneventful. Friday night I left for home in Wisconsin. While there was I-270, there was no Beltway and all routes west across Montgomery County were slow and circuitous. After Frederick, I had to take US 40 over the mountains. Being the Friday before Christmas, the roads were jammed with federal workers headed home for the holidays. It took forever and a day to get through Hagerstown on its narrow street with numerous stop lights.

While anxious to get home for the holidays and my one-week vacation after one week of work, I also looked forward to my return and facing the many challenges that Greenbelt offered its new city manager.

Robberies

November 30, 12:05 a.m., 6100 block Breezewood Court, a man reported that he was walking to a residence when he was approached by another man who displayed a handgun and announced a robbery. The victim ran from the scene. There is no definitive description of the suspect.

December 1, 10:07 p.m., 6400 block Ivy Lane, a man reported that he parked his vehicle in the parking lot of the Marriott Hotel and as he got out of his vehicle he was approached by another man. The suspect began asking the victim a question, standing only a few inches from him. Believing he was about to be robbed, the man punched the suspect in the face. The suspect displayed a handgun and ordered the man back into the driver's seat of his vehicle; the suspect got into the back seat. The victim then got out of the vehicle, ran from the scene and called police. The suspect also fled the scene, taking the victim's car keys with him. ## Sobriety Checkpoints Yield Results Here

Since July 18, 2003, Greenbelt police have conducted five sobriety checkpoints funded by the National Highway Administration. They were held as part of Checkpoint Strike Force, an annual enforcement effort. The objectives of the campaign are both to deter motorists from driving under the influence of drugs and alcohol and to identify and arrest those who ignore the dangers of getting behind the wheel while impaired.

Over 5,000 vehicles passed through the checkpoints, 22 persons were arrested for driving under the influence, four were arrested for drugs, two were arrested for other reasons and one stolen car was recovered.

Update

Greenbelt East Traffic Calming

City Manager Michael P. McLaughlin has plans to complete the Greenbelt East Traffic Calming project by spring 2006. Work planned for spring includes: construction of concrete traffic medians on Hanover Parkway and Ora Glen Drive; painting of formal crosswalks and stamping of pavement at intersections; construction of two traffic circles on Ora Glen (one at Frankfort, one at Morrison); construction of a traffic circle at Megan and Mathew; construction of four medians on Hanover Parkway and three on Ora Glen Drive; and planting of streetscape trees and bushes on Hanover Parkway. This work is delayed until warmer temperatures because of the sensitive nature of the materials, like concrete, needed to finish the projects.

Forty percent of the total plan will have been completed by the end of 2005. Some key accomplishments are: installation of 15 speed humps and signs alerting motorists to their presence throughout Greenbelt East; construction of an asphalt path for pedestrians between traffic circles on Hanover Parkway; extension of curbs and gutters on traffic circle at Lakes of Greenbelt Village entrance; and relocation of bus stops on Hanover Parkway. The city has spent around $68,000 or 17 percent of the $250,000 budget for the project.

Laurel Holds Kids' Holiday Party

The South Laurel Recreation Council volunteers will hold their annual free children's holiday program on Sunday, December 18 at 7 p.m. in the multi-purpose room of the Deerfield Run Elementary School and Community Center at 12000 Laurel-Bowie Road in Laurel.

The Bob Brown Puppets will present the "Nutcracker Fantasy," followed by a visit from Santa and his friends (teddy bear, snowman, panda and chipmunk). Each child will receive a gift. Admission and parking are free. For further information call 301-776-2805.

A Review

Two Singing Groups Wow Audience at Arts Center

by Sandra S. Smith

Two talented a cappella singing groups, the Chromatics and Tonic & Gin provided a delighted audience at the Greenbelt Arts Center on December 12 with an entertaining musical evening.

The Chromatics

The Chromatics wowed the audience with a blend of Christmas songs, musical stories about space and songs that seemed familiar until the Chromatics gave them a unique twist. Beautiful voices individually came together in even more beautiful harmony. The Chromatics sing a cappella and create not only the melodies but also all of the percussion and sound effects in every number.

The group's opening number, "We Sing," told the audience why we wouldn't like their songs. But we did. More than half of the audience was familiar with the group and awaited their favorites. The "Chromies" went on to sing seasonal selections - "Let it Snow," "White Christmas," "Angels We Have Heard on High," "I'll Be Home for Christmas," the Hanukkah Song and a satirical look at the Day After Christmas. Many of the songs featured solos by one or more group members.

The group also performed its version of the "Love Shack" and the Beach Boys' "Good Vibrations." Of special note, however, are the songs that members of the group have composed. Many teach about space, including the song about nine planets, with different members taking on the part of one or more planets. Mars warrants special attention in another offering.

The Chromatics write and deliver astronomically correct songs about space and one of their several CDs features lessons, games, videos and more to interest students and teachers in math and science.

The group had its roots with employees at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center, where it was formed more than 10 years ago. The sextet now consists of Musical Director Padi Boyd, Barry Mahaffey, John Meyer, Deb Nixon, Alan Smale and Karen Smale. They move around the stage easily and engage each other, and sometimes the audience, in entertaining banter. They claim to have decorated the set with holiday decorations from their own attics. Whatever, the result was a pleasant backdrop.

The group members are color-coded, with each singer wearing a different color of the rainbow. They opened the show, introduced Tonic and Gin, another a cappella group that shared the bill and ended the concert with another set. After the show, they mixed, mingled and served cake to the audience - all in all, an outstanding concert by a very versatile group. For more about the Chromatics, who perform in this area at many types of venues, check out their website at <http://www.thechromatics.com>.

Tonic & Gin

In a welcome feast of a cappella performances, the Chromatics were joined by Tonic & Gin. They're a newer group, just about a year and a half old, but also very talented and well prepared to entertain. The group of four women and two men sang Christmas songs, including "Silent Night," "Do You Hear What I Hear?," a beautiful rendition of "Carol of the Bells" and a sprightly version of "Grandma Got Run Over By a Reindeer."

Tonic & Gin complained about singing a "mundane, repetitive" but popular Christmas song and managed to weave in almost every other Christmas song - while leaving out a few days here and there - into the "12 Days of Christmas." Like the Chromatics, Tonic & Gin make the songs their own in both the words and melodies with intriguing and complex harmonies.

Tonic and Gin's members are Alison French, Carrie Nixon, Rachele Cooper, Erika Ettin, Jeff Hamilton and Ben Olinsky. Most sang in a cappella groups in college and now perform all around the D.C. metro area. They have a website at <http://www.tonicandgin.com/>.

City Notes

The horticulture crew assisted with snow removal on sidewalks and walkways during the storms, removed a hazardous tree from the cable TV wire on Ridge Road and removed salt from landscaped beds. They also pulled summer annuals on Hanover Parkway and cleaned landscaping at the post office and the aquatic center.

The refuse and recycling crew members collected 12.88 tons of paper, 3.96 tons of co-mingled recyclable materials and 35.02 tons of refuse.

Rh Negative Blood Critically Needed

The Greater Chesapeake & Potomac (GC&P) Blood Services Region of the American Red Cross has issued a critical call for blood donors with Rh negative blood types. A decline in blood donor appointments as the holidays approach, coupled with challenges faced during last week's snow, has caused inventory of Type O negative, Type B negative and Type A negative blood to drop to levels far below ideal. Donors are needed immediately to replenish the local blood supply and help ensure that shipments to hospitals can continue on a daily basis.

Appointments are available at all Red Cross Donor Centers and community blood drives and can be scheduled by calling 1-800-GIVE-LIFE. Platelet donors are also needed and appointments are available by calling 1-800-272-2123.

The public is asked to respond immediately to this need by calling 1-800-GIVE-LIFE to donate blood at any Red Cross community blood drive or Donor Center. As a special token of appreciation, they are offering participants a limited-edition "Authentic Lifesaver" T-shirt. Further information about donating blood, as well as a listing of all American Red Cross blood Donor Centers and community blood drives, is available by logging on to www.my-redcross.org.

Who Can Give

Donors must be in generally good health, be at least 17 years of age (or in the state of Maryland only 16 years of age with parental consent), weigh over 110 pounds, not have received a tattoo within the past year nor donated whole blood within the past 56 days.

The Patuxent Art League Exhibition is open to all artists over 18 years of age who live in Maryland, Northern Virginia or the District of Columbia. Participating artists work in all media and represent the diversity of artwork being created in this area. The Montpelier Arts Center's galleries are open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., seven days a week.

Host Families Share American Culture

Pacific Intercultural Exchange (PIE) is looking for caring families to host high school students from various countries for the 2006 spring semester. PIE asks local families to consider showing one of these foreign teens what American generosity is all about. Students from Brazil, Germany, South Korea and Norway have been staying with area families since August. Now a new group of international students would like to join the community from January to June.

There is no such thing as a typical host family. Whether a person is a single parent, retired, has small children, teens or no children at all, anyone can host an exchange student.

All the students are pre-screened - they speak English, have medical insurance and have their own spending money for incidental costs.

Those interested in hosting a student should call 800-631-1818. Experience is not necessary; an orientation and support will be provided.

Experience History At Laurel Mansion

Children ages 9 through 12, will experience a 19th century holiday at a fun, hands-on workshop on Saturday, December 17 from 10 a.m. to noon at Montpelier Mansion in Laurel. Make an old-fashioned tree decoration, play old-time parlor games and learn an English country dance. Reservations are required. An adult must accompany children. Montpelier Mansion is located at Rt. 197 and Muirkirk Road, Laurel. For information call 301-953-1376; TTY 301-699-2544.

Hospital Seeks 4-Wheel Drivers

Doctors Community Hospital is seeking volunteers interested in providing rides for hospital employees should a snowstorm this winter make roads difficult or impassable. People with 4-wheel drive vehicles are asked to register with the hospital before the inclement weather arrives.

Anyone interested in providing assistance should call Nancy Haupt, director of Environment of Care at 301-552-8026 to register. The hospital's snow-ride program has been very successful in the past, thanks to the volunteer drivers who have helped. Thanks to bad-weather driving volunteers, the hospital has always been able to provide continued patient care during weather emergencies.
