SHL Redevelopment Plan Again Dominates City Council Meeting

by Thomas X. White

It would have been a much shorter meeting of council on November 13 without the redevelopment plans for the Springhill Lake apartment community on the agenda. A meeting that could have ended at 9:30 went until just past 11 p.m. with the city planning staff providing another opportunity for community comment on the latest version of the Apartment Investment and Management Company, Inc. (AIMCO) Preliminary Plan of Subdivision submission and the city's long list of revised conditions that they are now proposing as requirements for "conditional" approval of the project that may go before the Prince George's County Planning Board as early as December 7. (See the issue of November 9, 2006, reporting on the council worksession November 1.)

SHL Preliminary Plan

The city planning staff, at council's request, presented again their recommended conditions that the city should insist upon for conditional approval of the revised preliminary plan. Council wanted citizens to hear the presentation and for both council and citizens to have an opportunity for review and comments. Terri Hruby, Greenbelt's assistant planner, again provided her summary of the changes that the staff had negotiated with AIMCO representatives over the past several weeks and the specific changes that the city staff was recommending that council include as conditions for its approval of the revised plan. As noted earlier, the material included in the staff presentation was generally similar to the presentation provided during the November 13 council worksession and reported in the News Review of November 9.

This time Hruby used a presentation to highlight the changes in the revised preliminary plan which now provides for a maximum 5,800 residential units, of which 35 percent will be for-sale units and approximately 27,000 square feet of commercial retail; proposed dedication of 3.2 miles of public roadway; a combination of private and public recreation facilities; storm water management pond/water amenity; less environmental variations; public safety commitments and improved pedestrian and transit access to the Metro Station.

Public safety highlights include payment of $4 million public safety surcharge for the construction of a new Greenbelt Fire/Rescue Station; commitment of $500,000 for improvements to the Greenbelt police station; a commitment to provide space for a city police substation and a commitment of $480,000 for funding of four city police officers.

The importance of the school capacity issue for Greenbelt West was highlighted. Under the conditional approval, the project would be capped at 2,899 units unless the school capacity issue is resolved. A Greenbelt West school capacity plan must be approved by the city and there must be a letter from the Board of Education before the 2,899th unit with an explanation of how the school capacity issue will be addressed. Finally, the developer agrees to $20 million in education surcharge fees targeted to a "Greenbelt educational complex." Community Planner Tarek Bolden also provided a presentation on the philosophical concepts for "Smart Growth" and the economies that could be achieved in infrastructure requirements when true smart growth principles are applied.

Council allowed a fair amount of time for both its own discussion of the issues and for citizen comments and questions. Jean Falcao wondered whether there should be requirements that the schools be located in the community so that they are "walkable."

Robert Fireovid, in reference to the possibility that only 2,899 units may be allowed, asked where, in terms of phasing would those 2,899 be located within the SHL development?

Patti Schwayder, the principal AIMCO representative present responded that phasing should be addressed at the Detailed Site Plan stage. In a follow-up Councilmember Edward Putens asked her "what would be the worst-case scenario?" Schwayder responded that, "All conditions will be resolved."

Councilmember Rodney Roberts questioned the specific language in condition no. 25 that he felt lacked sufficient specificity regarding where the students generated by a redeveloped SHL community would be assigned. He believed that the language could be construed that they could be assigned anywhere in the Prince George's County

American Education Week November 12-18, 2006

In celebration of American education these columns will continue to tell the stories of selected teachers from the five schools that service the Greenbelt community. Last week St. Hugh's School teachers were featured; this week readers will get a glimpse inside Greenbelt Middle School and Eleanor Roosevelt High School. In coming weeks there will be stories from Greenbelt and Springhill Lake Elementary Schools.

Sotomayor Enjoys Teaching At Eleanor Roosevelt HS

by Cathryn Simon, 12th grade

Shaneha Sotomayor joined the English Department of Eleanor Roosevelt High School this fall after moving to Maryland in August as the first person in her family to attend college. Her family had high expectations for her future.

high school students under the supervision of professors through the Young Scholars Program. After she graduated, Sotomayor taught high school students at Vineland High School, the same high school she had herself attended.

She attended Temple University in Philadelphia where she first pursued a biology major. She ended up changing to a major that she was more interested in, however – secondary English.

At Temple University she had the opportunity to teach

Sotomayor decided to move to the Washington, D.C., area to teach because of "its optimal location" and because she wanted a change. She wanted to move to Prince George's County because she had friends already living here. "I found

Miller and Holley Teach At Middle School Here

by Kimberly Metzinger

When Ronald Miller entered the business world after college, he quickly realized it wasn't for him. The monotony of sitting in an office with the same people every day became too much, so he decided to try his hand at teaching.

Miller, originally from Temple Hills but residing now in Berwyn Heights, majored in English and secondary education at Howard University in Washington, D.C. After spending a year with Ivy Planning Group, a consulting firm in the area, Miller decided to follow the path of his parents, both of whom were teachers and school administrators. Before his move, he says, "Every day was the same. It was so repetitive. But these kids, they have different attitudes," Miller said about his students at Greenbelt Middle School. "I laugh every single day and I don't feel like I'm

Correction

In the November 16 News Review Rebecca Boggs states that St. Hugh's School was once a convent and that is incorrect. It has always been a school though the gymnasium was used for all Catholic devotions when it was formerly an auditorium and before the church was built. The school was dedicated on September 8, 1949.

At that time the Sisters of the Holy Cross who taught in the school were housed at 58 Crescent Road next to the parish chapel. The rectory was built in 1959 and St. Hugh's Catholic Church, which joins the rectory by a breezeway, was built in 1963 and dedicated April 19, 1964.

Wonderful Theater

I hope that everyone who reads our community newspaper will give thought to checking out the Greenbelt Arts Center. Time and again I am astounded by the quality of the theatrical productions mounted there. Recent standouts have been "Death and the Maiden," "The Women" and "Equus," which is beginning to experience a revival around Washington (spurred by GAC's production?).

Now through December 3 is "The Biograph Girl," an interestingly staged, beautifully costumed and very well-sung musical that traces the early history of the motion picture industry. It's suitable for all ages and is a "reel" spirit lifter! The live orchestra adds immeasurably to the pleasure of the experience.

If you enjoy a good musical, don't miss this one!

Who Was the Masked Man/Woman/Donor?

A tremendous gesture of goodwill toward the children of Greenbelt Elementary School played out on November 14 in the school multipurpose room. Some 60 community members lined up to have their backgrounds checked and their fingerprints recorded so that they can volunteer as tutors, chaperones, aides and in various other capacities that help the students. They were doing this because newly-enforced county policy requires criminal background checks to be performed on volunteers. The background checks cost as much as $66 each, depending on the nature of volunteer work performed. The school system expects individual volunteers to cover these costs before they may volunteer their services in the schools.

To expedite the event, David Lange (the devoted volunteer who coordinates other volunteers throughout the school) made arrangements to bring the background-checkers to Greenbelt and spared dozens of volunteers from driving to Upper Marlboro for processing. An anonymous donor underwrote the cost.

To this anonymous friend of Greenbelt's students and to the dozens of volunteers who give their time and attention to our students, the PTA sends our deepest gratitude.

THANKS

The blood drive on November 17 at the Greenbelt Community Center was a huge success with a large number of blood donors. The drive helped the Red Cross meet the continued need in Iraq.

The Red Cross personnel staff were especially efficient during this blood drive.

Blood donors were given Red Cross T-shirts and participated in a raffle for a $50 gift card donated by Target Corporation. The winner will be named in an article next week.

The next blood drive will be held in the Greenbelt Community Center on Friday, February 23 from noon to 6 p.m. Those not contacted by the Red Cross for an appointment should call Janet Goldberg at 301-397-2212. Walk-ins are welcome to fill in for those who did not make their scheduled appointments.

Recreation Coordinator*

Understanding Autism

A big thank you goes out to the many people in the community who have responded so favorably to an article about our family.

We would like to invite everyone to pick up the November issue of Washingtonian Magazine. There is a feature story about our family. It discusses the daily trials and triumphs of raising children on the autism spectrum. We feel this is an important story not only for those dealing with autism in their own family but for the community as a whole. Recent data shows that one in 166 children will be diagnosed with some form of autism. So, odds are that everyone will either be directly or indirectly affected by this neurodevelopmental disorder.

By agreeing to do this in-depth article, it was our hope to help others understand that children on the spectrum are children first and not just their label. Ultimately this might help to make others more understanding of the families and more accepting of them in the community.

Many of the same issues are shared by families who have special needs family members with many different kinds of needs. We hope that by sharing our story we are helping others who are either beginning this life journey or who are interested in helping all families along the way.

A Two-Step Plan Without First Step?

AIMCO wants to build half of its proposed 5,800-unit development right away, without saying where the 2,899 units will be built. Since the same proposed plan would block AIMCO from building the other 2,901 units until the Springhill Lake Elementary School is relocated, Greenbelt could be stuck with an unknown, half-baked development for a long time. Instead of approving this two-step plan where the first step is missing, the city should demand that AIMCO submit a plan for its 2,899-unit redevelopment.

Robert Fireovid

SHL Education Is An Afterthought

The Springhill Lake redevelopment plan calls for demolishing the elementary school and moving it outside the community. Earlier this year, representatives from the city heard residents speak in favor of keeping the school in the center of the community. Yet the city appears ready to defer to both the County Board of Education and the developer's profit objectives. If the city can take a position, as it did in the last election, to support a proposed amendment to the Maryland Constitution, then it can certainly take a position on keeping the elementary school within a Greenbelt community. I would like to believe that education is a priority in Greenbelt, however, moving the elementary school out of the community does not treat it as such.

Mary Crellin Knits Yarn with Yarn

The word "yarn" may have multiple meanings for Greenbelt yarn artist Mary Crellin. Some of her scarves are made with interesting skeins she recently acquired in Bermuda, others were knit on a trip to Paris. "Now that's a city where women have a flair for wearing scarves!" says Crellin. Crellin creates truly original knits. "I don't use a pattern," she says. "Instead, I knit with whichever yarn appeals to me at the moment and stop when the scarf seems to reach the right proportions. Each piece is unique."

Crellin is a longtime Greenbelt resident, living in a little brick house her friends know as "Crescent Cottage." "Rarely am I without my knitting, a possible reflection to my British heritage of never having idle hands," says Crellin. A seasoned veteran of knitting for consistently sold-out fund raisers, this is the first time that "Crescent Cottage Knits" will be offered to the public. Check out Crellin's work at the Festival of Lights and be sure to ask her for the story that goes with each yarn.

The Greenbelt Festival of Lights Art and Craft Fair will be held on Saturday, December 2 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday, December 3 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Greenbelt Community Center, with artist demonstrations and hands-on crafts both days. Included will be the Greenbelt Pottery, Glass Guild of Greenbelt, ceramics, wood, jewelry, hand-made soap, cards, toys, fabric arts and refreshments.

On Saturday, artist demonstrations will be held from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

From 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. there will be a hands-on craft project for ages 4 to adult. Participants can decorate a Chinese take-out box with Artist-in-residence Celestine Ranney-Howes. From 1 to 2 p.m. there will be a free piano concert and community sing-along, offered by friends and students of Sonda Holland.

Miles Johnson

More than 150 people attended the funeral service for Miles Johnson, 27, at the Greenbelt Baptist Church on Saturday, November 11, 2006. The service was led by the Reverend Bobbi Troyer of Street-Lights Ministry. Troyer has ministered to people in Greenbelt who are homeless, including Miles Johnson, for the past year.

Audrey Johnson, Miles' mother, beseeched her son's friends to make some positive changes in their lives. Rev. Bobbi Troyer of StreetLights Ministry looks on.

“He was not typical,” Troyer told the News Review. “He was well spoken, smart and very polite.” She had avoided working with him for a long time, she said, because she disapproved of what he did. One day, she explained, he looked so needy that she approached him and asked, “Are you ready?” Knowing that her ministry focused on accepting Jesus, Miles said, “Yes.” They prayed together and he vowed to change his life. After the funeral, when she talked with his mother Audrey, they agreed that Miles had changed for a time but the positive change didn't last.

At the funeral Audrey Johnson spoke directly to the young people present. “You've got to make some changes,” she said. “Your mother loves you – don't ever think she doesn't.”

Reverend Troyer has found Greenbelt to be the most caring of the many communities in which she has practiced her ministry. She tries to bring hope to each individual while acknowledging that “their life choices are killing them.” Miles is the third homeless person she has known through her ministry who has died since she came to Greenbelt.

Why did Johnson and a friend go to the house on 48th Avenue in College Park in the early morning of Sunday, November 6? To rob, according to Prince George's County police.

According to their November 6 press release, a tenant in the house called 911 about 1:30 a.m. to say the house was being robbed. County officers responded, set up a perimeter and were waiting for backup when Johnson and his friend emerged from the house. When Johnson pointed his gun toward the police, officers fired at the suspects, killing Johnson and wounding the other suspect. Johnson's handgun was recovered at the scene.

The three county officers involved in the shooting were placed on administrative leave in accordance with departmental procedures. The investigation is

Who is Allah?

"Allah" is the Arabic word for "God." The same God that Moses in Hebrew called "Alaha" and Jesus in Aramaic called "Aloha." The Arabic translation of the bible used the word "Allah" for God, The Father in heaven. In the Qur'an He describes Himself this way. "Say: He is God, the One and Only. God the Eternal, Absolute. He begetteth not, nor is He begotten. And there is none like unto Him."

Six Greenbelt Artists Show at Harmony Hall

by Nicole DeWald, Arts Supervisor

Greenbelters visiting the Harmony Hall Regional Center will find a lot of familiar "folk" among the artists featured in the Center's current exhibition, "Folk Art: Tradition and Innovations." At least six Greenbelt artists are participating in the show. The public is invited to attend an awards presentation and artist's talk on Saturday, December 9 at noon.

Greenbelters' contributions to the exhibition reflect the exciting diversity of the arts in the community as well as the far-ranging influences of folk traditions. Landscape painter Dan Kennedy is represented by a new work entitled "Amish Sunday" (2006). Photographer Barbara Tyroler contributed an emerald underwater portrait, "Takesha and Sefia."

Four of the Greenbelt participants are current artists-in-residence at the Greenbelt Community Center. Marla McLean's "There But for the Grace of God Go I" (2006) consists of an intriguing series of miniature shrines in antique wooden boxes. Celestine Ranney-Howes contributed a trio of beautiful fabric vessels and Elizabeth Morisette lent wall and pedestal sculptures created from recycled materials using motifs such as the sushi box.

Jean Newcomb's stained glass piece "The Green Man as Safe Haven" is an eloquent expression of the artist's own environmental convictions as well as the "green" values of the broader Greenbelt community. Newcomb is the founding force behind the community's Green Man Festival which originated in 2005.

Selection

The artists were selected for participation in this exhibition by Dr. Raymond Dobard, a noted artist and professor of art history at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Awards Juror Margo Humphrey, a printmaker and professor at the University of Maryland in College Park, will be the featured speaker at a free program on Saturday, December 9 from noon to 2 p.m. Humphrey will discuss the influences of folk art on her own recent work, a tribute to African American music culture of the 1950s. She will also announce her selections for artist awards of up to $1,000 and the Prince George's Arts Council will announce a purchase award at this function. There will be a light lunch. Those planning to attend should RSVP to 301-203-6070.

Harmony Hall is located at 10701 Livingston Road in Fort Washington. The current exhibition continues through December 30. Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.; and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

"Folk Art: Tradition and Innovations" is a program of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission (MNCPPC) Prince George's County, Arts and Cultural Heritage Division, and is partially funded by a grant from the Maryland State Arts Council, an agency of the state of Maryland and the National Endowment for the Arts. Bringing Back Memories of Pearl Harbor

by Virginia Beauchamp

Why should a young Englishman be speaking to a roomful of Americans about a searing moment in U.S. history? Rob Chester, a doctoral candidate at the University of Maryland, apparently stumbled onto the subject at the University of Wyoming, where he did his master's level research in American Studies. As he was to learn, a vast collection of documents of former Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, on duty at the time of the attack on Pearl Harbor, was housed at that institution.

Since then Chester has been researching the history and evolution of American memory of that event. His title, "Pearl Harbor in American Memory, 1941 to 2001," shows his take on the subject. He spoke to Greenbelt residents at a lecture in the Community Center on November 14 sponsored by the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum.

Shock

While Chester described the initial American reaction to the Pearl Harbor attack as "a certain degree of shock," in my memory — I was a college senior — the degree of shock was absolute. Since the end of World War I, Americans had been immersed in a culture of isolationism. Of paramount concern was the motivation to stay out of the European war. I remember writing freshman English papers on the subject. On that never-to-be-forgotten Sunday, our family had turned on the radio for the afternoon broadcast of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and stood immobilized by the awful news.

On the other hand, the Roosevelt administration had been gearing up to provide assistance to the European allies. Merchant ships were carrying war supplies to the British and an initial draft of men into the Army had begun.

My cousin Donald's number had been called up in the very first draft sometime in the previous spring or summer. But the military then was so unprepared that Donald's unit practiced marching with sticks instead of guns over their shoulders. He felt aggrieved to have been pulled out of his civilian life. But once we were at war, his unit was shipped off to England where he spent the rest of the war at a motor pool in Bury St. Edmunds keeping Army vehicles in shape.

A friend joined the Army Air Force and became the navigator on a bomber lost early on a mission over Germany. An immediate result of America's entry into the war was the establishment of what was called War Time, turning the clocks ahead by an hour as we had been used to doing in the summer. I remember how cold and black it was to go off to campus for 8 a.m. classes that winter.

The University of Michigan also condensed its calendar to make room for three instead of two semesters a year. The holiday period after Christmas was reduced to a day or two and the between-semester break and spring break were both eliminated. I remember how exhausted I was. Only when I came down with the mumps and was restricted to bedrest for two weeks was I able to get back my energy.

Doris Miller

As a kind of symbol of the evolution of American memories of Pearl Harbor, Chester returned from time to time to an early hero, Doris Miller. (Miller's unusual first name stemmed from his mother's desire for a girl when he was born.) Miller was an African American sailor, a cook on a ship under attack by the Japanese planes. Although untrained as a gunner, he picked up an unattended machine gun and destroyed one or more Japanese planes.

For this action in 1942 he received the Navy Cross and participated for a time in bond rallies around the country. Then, like other black military men, his contributions were ignored. But in 1973, in a different cultural moment, his contribution as a war hero was resurrected and a ship, the U.S.S. Miller, was named for him. (His feminine first name was, however, deleted.) In 1974 an elementary school in Waco, Texas was named for Doris Miller.

Admiral Kimmel

In Chester's lecture, Admiral Husband E. Kimmel also demonstrated a changing and evolving memory of the Pearl Harbor disaster. Kimmel and an Army general were charged with dereliction of duty and reduced in rank for "allowing" the attacks to happen. But as the Japanese, once our fiercest enemy, became transformed into a capitalist ally during the Cold War, especially during the Korean War, Kimmel's fate also was undergoing transformation.

According to Chester, Hollywood films during the 1950s began to criticize the internment of Japanese Americans during the war and Japanese participants worked with the American filmmakers of the historical film "Tora Tora Tora." In 1962 the remains of the American warship Arizona were dedicated as a war memorial.

In the 1970s Japanese Americans who had been interned during World War II sought redress for their treatment at the time and in 1988 President Reagan signed a bill providing $20,000 in reparations for those individuals who had survived.

Kimmel himself was honored in 1987 and in 1995 a Congressional committee recommended removal of the dereliction of duty charge against the former admiral. Kimmel himself had worked indefatigably to clear his name — as a large collection of papers at the University of Wyoming attests.

60 Years Later

The 60th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor brought forth what Chester described as "the peak" of commemorations of what President Roosevelt had labeled that "day of infamy." According to Chester, some 22 TV shows dealt with the topic and a Disney film, "Pearl Harbor," came out in June 2001.

Still more reminiscences were generated by the 9/11 attacks. Chester suggests that the 9/11 attacks were seen as analogous to Pearl Harbor and the Arab men were analogized to the Japanese bomber pilots of Pearl Harbor in World War II.

Eleanor Roosevelt had a lot of positive things going on," Sotomayor reflected. She also liked how the English Department focused on writing.

Compared to the school where she had previously taught, she felt "the student body at Eleanor Roosevelt was a lot more friendly and polite." She likes the diversity in the student body, although she misses the familiarity of her old school.

Sotomayor is sponsoring a student-run magazine this year called Speak Out which will focus on teen issues. Outside of Eleanor Roosevelt High School, she teaches an English class of about 13 students at a community-based classroom on Mondays and Wednesdays. Currently she is in the application process of going back to school for her master's degree in higher education at the University of Maryland.

working."

He is currently in his first year at Greenbelt Middle School, teaching seventh grade language arts.

"I love teaching this age group," Miller said, "because teenagers are old enough to receive advice but not old enough where they've formed all of their own opinions."

Miller develops a good relationship with his students and wants to see them all succeed. He also admits there are challenges that come with the job.

"Grading papers is probably the hardest part of the job. English isn't like math where you have one answer key for an assignment. With English you have to go through and read 70 papers for content and grammar. Staying on top of that is tough," Miller said.

Despite this drawback, when Miller realizes he has gotten through to his students, it makes the job worthwhile and reminds him why he became a teacher.

"You want [all of the students] to get it, so that's what keeps you coming back.

"The biggest reward in teaching is when the students learn something. It's the little things, like when they say, 'Mr. Miller, you're my favorite teacher' or 'Mr. Miller, I love your class.' When they light up and say thank you, that's the greatest," Miller said.

Coaching

In addition to teaching, Miller also coaches the boys' basketball team at Greenbelt Middle School. Having played basketball at Howard University on a partial athletic and partial academic scholarship, Miller values the balance his students can create. At the end of the school day during the season, Miller's players have one hour of study hall and one hour of practice.

"You can't play athletics if you don't have academics," Miller said.

Recently Miller entered his school into a drawing to participate in "Gilbert Scores for Schools," a fundraiser created by Washington Wizards' guard Gilbert Arenas.

For each home game, Arenas will donate one dollar to a local school for every point he scores. Wizards Chairmen Abe and Irene Pollin, in support of Arenas' efforts, have decided to donate one dollar for every point Arenas scores at away games.

Almost 200 area schools entered into the drawing, and Greenbelt Middle School was announced as the fundraising recipient for the March 14 game against the Indiana Pacers. The money will be used for school supplies and after-school programs.

As evidenced by Miller's presence both inside the classroom and on the basketball court, he supports his students 100 percent and wants them to know that.

"I respect my kids and in return they respect me. I tell them I'm on their side and they know if they ever have a problem with an adult, I have their backs."

Sandra Holley

Originally from Delray Beach, Florida, Sandra Holley left the sunshine state after graduating with a degree in education from Florida A & M University. She headed off to the nation's capital to pursue a career far from teaching. However, plans changed along the way for the Greenbelt Middle School eighth grade teacher.

Holley came to Washington to attend the Ardis School of Design. While in fashion school, she put her education degree to use by substituting in local schools when she wasn't in class herself. But the fashion school was about to change locations and Holley did not plan to follow the school once it moved.

"My goal was to attend fashion design school and go to Europe to become a designer," Holley said. "That fell through when the school moved to Maryland. I just lost interest in the school because it was going through a transition."

When Holley realized a career in fashion was not in her future, she turned her attention toward education.

Holley spent seven years at Matthew Henson Middle School in Charles County teaching math and social studies to seventh and eighth graders. From there she moved to Prince George's County, where she taught for 17 years at Middleton Valley Academy in Clinton.

Now in her 20th year of teaching in Prince George's County, Holley teaches math to eighth grade students, the grade she prefers most, at Greenbelt Middle School.

"I like seeing the maturity at the end of the school year that lets me know they're prepared for high school. I'm proud of that maturity," Holley said.

The biggest challenge Holley faces in the classroom arises when she knows the students are not using all the knowledge they are equipped with.

"The voids they have in the area of math can be frustrating because I know the curriculum and I know what was taught in lower grades," Holley said. "But when that void is filled with practice, and the sparks go off in their eyes, I get so motivated."

A dedicated teacher, Holley wants to ensure that her students continue to do well in school and in life when they step out of her classroom.

"I stay in contact with most of my students from elementary school to high school. The other day a former fifth grade student who is now in tenth grade called to tell me how he was doing in football," Holley said as her face lit up.

While teaching math was not what Holley always wanted to do, she has always had a passion for the subject and tried to pass that on to her students with effective teaching methods.

"When I was in school, math was my favorite subject and I did exceptionally well in all math classes through the years. I'm a hands-on learner and I teach from that perspective: 'Show me what you know.' I teach it, I show it and the students apply it," Holley said.

Outside the classroom, Holley is involved in her church, From the Heart Church Ministries in Temple Hills. She served as an usher for 20 years, wrote a proposal for Tuesday night children's Bible study and worked with the children's ministry and youth ministry.

In addition, she is the proud mother of a recent Florida A & M graduate. Her daughter, Tisa, graduated from Holley's alma mater in 2005 with a master's degree in guidance and counseling. She now teaches at a nearby school.

Computer Graphics Teacher Works on Certification

by Mercedes Stakem, 12th grade

Linda Cunningham, a computer graphics teacher at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, is trying for her National Board Certification. She hopes to be among 50,000 teachers in the United States with this prestigious award.

includes videotaping a class in session, documenting students to measure their growth (in art, comparing students' work over time) and an introspective essay on the teacher's teaching methods. All the criteria enable the teachers to analyze and describe how they would better their classes. Cunningham explains that she doesn't "always think about what [she] does" and that these tests are a good way to examine her "educational strategies."

Cunningham, who has been at Roosevelt for five years, explains that this is the best possible time for her to pursue certification. Not only did she help build the entire computer graphics program at Roosevelt but she can also boast a 100 percent passing rate by AP computer graphics students. With her "wonderful students" and supportive principal and colleagues, Cunningham has the best conditions for achieving this credential. She believes she has the ideal work environment to help her achieve National Board Certification.

National Board Certification is a recognition of achievement awarded by the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, an organization created in 1987 to better the education systems in America. According to the board's website, to qualify for candidacy a teacher must fit many criteria including three years of teaching, a baccalaureate degree from an accredited university and a valid teaching license.

Although national board certification does not supercede state certification for teaching, it is a benchmark recognized in all states and desired by all schools. Cunningham decided to pursue certification because it is "the best way to take a step back and look at your teaching methods."

When the officer exited his vehicle, the suspect ran from the scene into the woods. The cab driver reported that he picked up two people at the Greenbelt Metro Station and drove them to the 9300 block of Edmonston Road, where they then assaulted him from behind and demanded money. The area was searched with the assistance of a K-9 dog and handler. City Receives Budget Award

The City of Greenbelt has been awarded the Government Finance Officers Association's Distinguished Budget award for the 18th consecutive year.

The award represents a significant achievement by an entity. It reflects the commitment of the governing body and staff to meeting the highest principles of governmental budgeting. In order to receive the budget award, the entity had to satisfy nationally recognized guidelines for effective budget presentation. These guidelines are designed to assess how well an entity's budget serves as a policy document, a financial plan, an operations guide and a communications device.

Budget documents must be rated "proficient" in all four categories to receive the award.

When a Distinguished Budget Presentation Award is granted to an entity, a Certificate of Recognition for Budget Presentation is also presented to the individual or department designated as being primarily responsible for its having achieved the award. The award was presented to City Manager Michael P. McLaughlin.

For budgets including fiscal periods 2004, 1,027 entities received the award. Award recipients have pioneered efforts to improve the quality of budgeting and provide an excellent example for other governments throughout North America.

The Government Finance Officers Association is a nonprofit professional association serving 16,000 government finance professionals throughout North America. The GFOA's Distinguished Budget Presentation Awards Program is the only national awards program in governmental budgeting.

"Kudos to Jeff Williams, David Moran, Anne Marie Belton and Beverly Palau for their excellent work," said McLaughlin. A presentation will be scheduled when the plaque is received.

Winter Depression Workshop Offered

The Mental Health Association of Prince George's County will sponsor a free workshop on winter blues, also known as seasonal affective disorder, on Saturday, December 2 from noon to 4 p.m. at Hyattsville Elementary School. There will be a light holiday dinner served following the workshop.

This program is for those who suffer or know someone who suffers from increased sadness, fatigue or appetite loss during the winter and/or the holidays. Information will be provided on signs and symptoms of winter and holiday blues, treatment options and differences among winter blues, holiday blues and clinical depression.

Winter blues is a mood disorder associated with depression and related to seasonal variation of light. The most difficult months for sufferers are January and February – younger people and women are at higher risk.

While the holiday season is a time full of joy, cheer, parties and family gatherings, it can also be an unhappy time of self-evaluation, loneliness, reflection of past failures and anxiety about an uncertain future affecting others. Holiday blues may be caused by stress, fatigue, unrealistic expectations, over-commercialization, financial limits and/or the inability to be with family and friends. Even more people experience post-holiday letdown after January 1 resulting from disappointments during the preceding months, compounded by excess stress and fatigue.

Register in advance online at www.mhpgc.org or by calling the Mental Health Association at 301-699-2737.

Environmental Groups Announce Lawsuit to Block ICC

by Elaine Skolnik

The Audubon Naturalist Society (ANS) announced last week that it plans to block construction of the Intercounty Connector (ICC). ANS will be filing a legal challenge concerning the state conducting its study under the terms of the National Environmental Policy Act.

Similarly, the Environmental Defense Fund and the Sierra Club have filed their intention to sue the federal government and the regional Transportation Planning Board. The environmental groups will be challenging the air quality analysis under the Clean Air Act in the ICC study to protect the public health. The deadline for filing suits is December 20.

The 18-mile, $3 billion (with financing) toll highway, which would provide an east-west link from Interstate 270 to I-95 north of the Capital Beltway, has been fought over for decades. The current ICC study was launched in 2003 after two earlier studies failed to receive approval of the appropriate federal agencies.

To fast-track the project, Governor Robert Ehrlich went directly to President George W. Bush, who issued an executive order to fast-track the environmental review process of the ICC and 12 other projects around the country.

David Buck, spokesperson for the State Highway Administration, told the News Review that in this third-round study, unlike earlier studies, both the state's legal staff and the federal agencies have been involved in the study process from the beginning. He noted that all agencies have given the ICC study their blessing. He was confident that groundbreaking for the ICC would occur in the spring.

It was on May 29, 2006, with the approval of the Record of Decision, that the Federal Highway Administration of the U.S. Department of Transportation granted "Location approval" for the proposed ICC in Montgomery and Prince George's Counties.

According to the November 8, 2006, issue of The Washington Post, "the case (by the Environmental Defense Fund and Sierra Club) would provide the first legal test of new federal regulations on a particular type of pollutant particles. The Clean Air Act says the federal agencies cannot approve any projects that would add those fine particles to the air in regions where they already exceed federal standards." (The Washington region does not meet these standards.)

The environmental groups would like to see air quality monitors placed near Interstates 95 and 270 and the Capital Beltway and a study of likely levels of pollution in areas near the ICC route.

In a November 14 release, Neal Fitzpatrick, executive director of the ANA, said, "we have been concerned that the Ehrlich administration would violate both the spirit and letter of laws designed to ensure a fair consideration of alternatives and a complete analysis of impacts that results in the most effective and least damaging project."

He emphasized that the study failed to look at a range of options to address traffic including the Purple Line, local road fixes and shifting future jobs to transit stations in Prince George's County. The Audubon and others, he noted, "even commissioned a study of a package of alternatives and submitted it to the state."

Greenbelt

The route not only links the preferred ICC from I-270 to I-95 but extends easterly to U.S. Route 1 (Baltimore Avenue) in Prince George's County. Presumably this extension and other alignment changes would bring the ICC closer to proposed development on Konterra's 2,300 acres, 475 acres of which have been annexed by the City of Laurel.

Most of Konterra is in an unincorporated area south of Laurel. On November 24, 2003, Laurel passed a resolution supporting the southern Master Plan alignment extension of the ICC from I-95 to Baltimore Avenue that would enable an eventual link-up to Kenilworth Avenue Extended.

Laurel's council specifically endorsed further construction of an extension of Kenilworth Avenue providing better access to the proposed Konterra

Town Center.

The action by Laurel was contrary to the City of Greenbelt's position and that of College Park and Bowie, all of whom are concerned with potential negative impacts from constructing the ICC. For decades Greenbelt City Councils have vigorously opposed the ICC. They feared that construction of the ICC, combined with any extension into Prince George's County that could eventually link up with a widened Kenilworth Avenue Extended (Edmonston Road), would have a huge adverse impact in Greenbelt.

Council Meets New Employee, Award Winners; ZipCar Redux

by Thomas X. White

At its meeting on November 13, the council agenda consisted of presentations, a citizen petition relating to the city's Festival of Lights celebrations, a first reading of a resolution for the purchase of parking citation services and the city's proposed legislative program for the upcoming Maryland General Assembly session beginning in January. (The final item will be covered in next week's issue.)

Leading off the evening's agenda was the introduction of Daryl Pennington who is assuming the post of Green Ridge House Service Coordinator. Pennington was introduced by Christal Parker Batey, Greenbelt's community resource advocate who noted that her role is to help Green Ridge House residents access programs, benefits and services such as food stamps and energy assistance and to coordinate health related speakers and services that are requested by the residents. Pennington is an 11-year resident of the city and has over 15 years experience working with seniors, some of which was with the Greenbelt Adult Care Center. Currently, the position is funded through a grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The meeting was also the occasion of the annual Recycle Right Awards program that recognizes five households in the city for the quality of their participation in the city's recycling pick-up program routes. The winning households included Toni and Kathy Fominaya of Northway, Frank and Alice Pearlman of Plateau Place who were in attendance to receive their handsome new personalized recycling bins and other gifts. Other winners were George Withers of Rosewood Drive in Boxwood, Peter Curtis of Pinecrest Court in Lakeside and Beatrice McDay of Canning Terrace in Windsor Green.

For the occasion, Mayor Judith Davis also presented Neal Barnett, chair of the Greenbelt Recycling & Environment Advisory Committee (REAC) with the city proclamation celebrating America Recycles Day, which will be celebrated on Wednesday, November 15. REAC Committee members Mary Crellin and Mary Chapman and Cindy Murray, the city's recycling coordinator, also were on hand for the ceremonies. Cindy Comproni, manager of the Greenbelt Federal Credit Union, also received a plaque from REAC for the Credit Union's sponsorship of two community Shred-It events this year.

Under Petitions and Requests, a statement and request was made by Larry Yore asking the council to review whether there has been any "focused, conscious and deliberate" decision to exclude any religious custom or tradition from the city's celebration of the Festival of Lights. Yore also requested that the city consider the inclusion of an annual contest that he is coordinating, namely a poster contest called "Keep Christ in Christmas," for children in grades one through eight. Also requested was space in the Youth Center for a display of selected entries to the contest.

The mayor and council advised Yore that the customary procedure followed by council with petitions received at council meeting was that they not be acted upon that night. Council did agree to refer the statement and request to the city's Community Relations Advisory Board and the city solicitor for their review and recommendations and to also refer the item to the Greenbelt Inter-Faith Leadership Association for their information and consideration. Yore was advised that there may also be time to include his notice on the poster contest in the proposed program that the city publishes for the Festival of Lights celebration and he was advised to provide information to the Recreation Department for their review.

Under Administrative Reports, City Manager Michael McLaughlin reported that, based on demand, the city has worked with ZipCar to return a rental vehicle to the Roosevelt Center lot for use by Greenbelt residents. He noted that when the city's Zip Car program was initiated several years ago, two cars were provided, one at Green Ridge House (GRH) and one next to the Municipal Building. Early experience was that there was not enough use of the car placed in the Center and the program reverted to only the GRH location for use by GRH residents and other citizens. This year, the experience has been that the ZipCar is used frequently by GRH and there is a growing demand by other residents. To meet this demand, a new red Toyota Matrix is now in the Roosevelt Center parking lot. Those wishing information on the program that provides car rentals for short-time use, can go to www.zipcar.com. McLaughlin also noted the installation of blinking lights on the pedestrian crossing bollards at several of Greenbelt's cross walks. The devices were seen by Celia Craze, the city's planning director, at a recent convention she attended.

Citation Collection

Introduced for first reading by Councilmember Edward Putens was a resolution authorizing the city to negotiate the purchase of citation collection services from Complus Data Innovations, Inc., of Tarrytown, New York. Council had received a staff presentation on the services that could be provided by Complus Data Innovations, Inc., to support the city's collection operation for traffic citations. Although pleased with its current vendor, the city felt that Complus would improve the efficiency of the collections. The service would provide handheld ticket-writers with greater access to the citation data base, both of which will benefit the city's employees and residents. The resolution will be considered for final action at the council meeting on November 27.

school system and asked for more specific language to assure that they would be served by community schools. Craze assured Roberts that the intent was that the students be served by local schools. She felt the language could be tightened to address Roberts' concerns.

Lowell Owens, representing the Citizens to Restore Indian Creek, called for more specific requirements for "Green Design and Green Building" techniques and Low Impact Development features. He called for language that makes sure the objectives are carried out. Larry Yore questioned the provisions for taking care of the current SHL residents and the options open to them for remaining in the community. Davis assured Yore that the city had similar concerns and were assured that the residents wishing to stay in SHL would be given opportunities to be located in the development or in other AIMCO properties.

Roberts reiterated his often stated concerns regarding the insufficient provision of competition size ball fields in the revised plan and repeated his feeling that the developer's quest for increased density is pushing the ball field issue aside and, "cheating the future residents of the community out of adequate ball fields."

The SHL preliminary plan and council consideration of the staff recommended conditions will be on the council agenda for November 27 for action.
