

City Council and GEAC Honor Sheldon Goldberg, Discuss Issues

by Barbara Hopkins

At a worksession with the Greenbelt East Advisory Committee (GEAC) on March 5, the Greenbelt City Council and GEAC members honored and thanked Sheldon Goldberg of Windsor Green for his many years of service to the committee. Mayor Judith Davis presented Goldberg with a plaque of appreciation for over 20 years of service to GEAC, to the city and to the Greenbelt East community.

Goldberg said he had been chair of GEAC for "too long" and now carries the new title of chair emeritus. He was attending the meeting as alternate representative for Windsor Green. He added that he "is not going anywhere" and will remain involved.

A summary of other topics of general interest on the agenda that evening follows.

Code Enforcement

GEAC sent a list of houses of neighborhood concern to the city to see if any violations would fall under the city's jurisdiction. Goldberg said his homeowners' association asked city code enforcement to look into 654 designated needed repairs. He said inspectors had investigated and the list is now down to about 50.

GEAC members also had concerns about parking issues. People are parking too close to the dividers near roundabout entrances, making it hard for large vehicles such as trucks and buses to get around them.

Blowing trash and trash receptacles left out too long were issues that GEAC had taken up with the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability, which recommended more education of residents on the topics.

Members of GEAC were troubled by the illegal distribution of flyers where it has been posted they should not be left. GEAC members were instructed to put the receiver's name and address and the date on the flyer and deliver it to the city office; staff would then contact the company to inform them of the violation. Financial penalties for such illegal distribution exist and increase substantially with repeated offenses.

During discussion of the use of Schrom Hills fields by soccer teams during the summer months, City Manager Michael McLaughlin said the city will make it a high priority for city park rangers to monitor this situation in the coming season. McLaughlin noted that a permit is required for use of the fields. He suggested that after business hours residents suspecting illegal use of the fields may call the non-emergency number for the police department to make a report.

Newspaper Boxes

Davis said major newspaper publishers have signed the city's agreement on use of vending boxes inside city limits. A matrix of approved locations for the boxes in Greenbelt East will be forwarded to the members of GEAC. If a new box appears that is not on the matrix, members were asked to inform the

Congregation Holds Gala Feting Rabbi Cohen's 10th Anniversary

by Paula Clinedinst

Technical writing's loss was Judaism's gain," said Cantor Phil Greenfield, emcee of Saturday night's gala honoring Rabbi Jonathan Cohen and his 10 years of service to Mishkan Torah Synagogue. Referring to the profession Cohen had prior to becoming a rabbi – which happened when he was 48 – Greenfield described Cohen's mid-life crisis as a gain for the Mishkan Torah congregation. There was no doubt the roughly 150 people in attendance that night would agree.

"In Rabbi Cohen we have found a rabbi willing to share more than intellect," said Greenfield. Cohen also brings wit, an earthy laugh and a strong ethical sense to the Mishkan Torah family.

As a technical writer Cohen taught engineers how to write reports and, in addition, was a freelance translator from French to English. At that time he became active in a synagogue in Montreal and discovered Robert Bly's Iron John: A Book About Men. Drawn to the book's message he started teaching study groups on how the stories of the past are of great importance to modern people. So was resolved the mid-life crisis.

Cohen hails from Montreal, Canada, and was brand new to the rabbinical world when he came to Greenbelt 10 years ago. Although he was 48 years old, married and a father, he was a baby rabbi, having just graduated from the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College (RRC) near Philadelphia. Reconstructionist teachings use the approach of bringing ancient wisdom into the contemporary world.

"We try to keep it real," says Cohen, "because when theory and the actuality of life don't jibe, maybe you need to bend the theory to meet the facts at least half-way."

Cohen has been described as a retail rabbi, not a wholesale rabbi, meaning that he works one-on-one with people not necessarily by getting a message out to the whole world. "Sometimes you just need to be there for someone," he says.

When faced with the question, "Why do bad things happen to good people?" Cohen believes there really is not a "one size fits all meaning," but that what we can do is to derive a lesson learned, a meaning or an interpretation from the experience. In fact, being there to help a person in crisis is when Cohen feels he is actually doing some good in the world.

RRC helps place its graduates in synagogues and Cohen was looking for something either in Chicago or the Baltimore/Washington area. After sending his resume to Mishkan Torah, he was

by Paula Clinedinst

The City of Greenbelt has many unsung heroes. In its 70 years Greenbelt has remained a self-supporting network of many people doing many things to make this a great place to live. Amy Hansen is one of these people.

In addition to being a published author, Hansen is a wife and mother. She helped start the New Deal Café, has been PTA president at Greenbelt Elementary School (GES), runs informal educational projects in and out of the schools and is taking steps to maintain a "greener" household. She gets inspired by service, she says – by people contributing to the causes and organizations they support – and perhaps is unaware that she, herself, is inspiring.

Amy Hansen

"Be humble for you are made of earth; be noble for you are made of stars." This Serbian proverb, a credo for Hansen and her family, is found on a plaque hanging in their home. In an effort to live as "green" and efficient as possible, they have solar panels on the roof, a solar cooker in the kitchen and four solar tubes that function like skylights.

In the month of June, the family tries to have an electric budget that is based on what can be produced in their own system. Says Hansen, "I'm constantly looking for what can be turned on or off. You'd be amazed at how fast the solar cooker really cooks."

GHI and Members Consider Energy Purchasing Club

by Mary Moien

Greenbelt Homes Inc., (GHI) and the Baltimore Washington Corridor Chamber of Commerce (BWCCC) sponsored a meeting on March 4 to discuss the possibility of GHI members joining what was advertised as a "Residential Energy Purchasing Cooperative." The plan discussed involved purchasing electricity in bulk through providers identified by CQI Associates, an energy and management consulting firm. GHI is currently purchasing electricity through this process for its commercial buildings. The plan is now being expanded to residential homes affiliated with the BWCCC.

More than 100 residents crowded a meeting room to discuss their high electric bills and the possibility of obtaining a reduction in the rates.

CQI, described the fundamentals of energy deregulation and how it has affected residential electric rates. He indicated that by coming together and purchasing energy in bulk, residents could save the equivalent of one summer month of an electric bill. GHI General Manager Gretchen Overdurff indicated that it was approximately what the GHI commercial buildings are saving.

Anderson stated that his aim is to get GHI residents the lowest rates possible. Some members indicated that they would be willing to pay more to obtain more environmentally-friendly (green/wind) energy. He indicated that that was possible but the rates would be slightly higher. The wind energy option appealed to many who were present.

Letters to the Editor

San Francisco, Not State of California

Bay Woods' front page story in the March 5, 2009, issue contains two unfortunate but non-trivial errors.

"Sylvestri pointed out, however, that though 2005 was the first year California used Choice Voting . . ."

The state of California has never used Choice Voting (or any kind of preferential or proportional voting). Mr. Sylvestri was referring to a report by FairVote that focused on San Francisco municipal elections, not California state elections. Also, San Francisco did not use Choice Voting. If I'm not mistaken, Sylvestri cited the FairVote report that indicates San Francisco used what is called Instant Run-off Voting or IRV. As the article correctly indicates, IRV applies only to single-seat contests and therefore not to Greenbelt's council contest.

The two articles by Bay Woods were otherwise spot-on. Excellent writing.

Choice Voting

In the last city election a losing candidate captured 53 percent of the vote. If the candidate had been an African American, Greenbelt might well have been in violation of the Voting Rights Act. Of course, needing 53 percent would be discouraging to any minority candidate and it should be changed. Shouldn't 20 percent of our electorate, voting together, be able to elect their top candidate as one of our five councilmembers? That would happen with choice voting.

Districts are not the answer to problems with our voting system. In my opinion, districts cannot be drawn fairly and would be subject to future litigation, as some of our minorities would be spread across the districts and thus have their vote diluted.

Furthermore, districts would allow a candidate to be elected by as little as 10.1 percent of the voters in a 2-candidate race and 6.7 percent in a 3-candidate race.

Vote splitting in districts could even result in the least popular candidate winning. Choice voting, on the other hand, requires higher voter support – at least 16.6 percent to win one of our five seats – and it solves the problem of vote splitting.

Choice voting requires that voters rank the candidates in order of preference; e.g., from 1 to 5. How hard is that? Second graders can do it! You can learn more about choice voting at fairvote.org.

Folk Dance Party Coming on March 20

by Jeri Holloway

March 20 is the spring equinox! What better way to celebrate and break out from the winter blahs than a folk dance party? Come to the Greenbelt Youth Center on Friday, March 20 at 7:30 p.m. to dance to lively music, be with friendly people and have a few snacks.

All of this is available to everyone interested in joining the folk dance group that has been dancing in Greenbelt since 1996 with leader Roland Forbes. Forbes has had experience in folk dance circles in the Washington, D.C., area for many years.

His love of folk dancing is contagious and makes all of the dancers in the group want to become experts. Dances from many countries are taught during the evening's festivities; perhaps from Greece, Romania, Bulgaria, Israel, England, Germany, France, Italy, Russia, to name a few.

All should wear comfortable shoes. Partners are not necessary. People who enjoy the dance party will have the opportunity to sign up for the dance class spring session.

Reel and Meal Offers Documentary "Thirst"

The documentary "Thirst" will be shown at the New Deal Café on Monday, March 16 at 7 p.m. It is sponsored by the Reel and Meal at the New Deal, a monthly film series that explores vital environmental and social justice issues and is sponsored by nine Greenbelt community organizations. There is no charge for the film. At 6:30 an optional vegan buffet will be available for purchase.

As global corporations are rapidly buying up local water supplies, communities lose control of their most precious resource – water. "Thirst" reveals how water is the catalyst for explosive community resistance to globalization. The film tells the stories of communities in Japan, Bolivia, India and the United States that are facing challenges as water becomes the most valuable commodity of the 21st century.

Sarah Gringold, a researcher for the water program at Food & Water Watch, and Andy Fellows, Chesapeake Regional Director of Clean Water Action, will answer questions and talk about the local water situation after the film.

The Empty Bowls article on page one February 26 gave an incorrect email address for Greenbelt Pottery Group president Mary Gawlik. The correct address is megawlik04@comcast.net.

The name of Che Sayles, president of the Greenbelt West Residents Association, was misspelled in the article on city expenditures on the voting rights issue in last week's News Review. Our apologies.

Our Neighbors

Condolences to the family and friends of longtime Greenbelter Pat Parker of Research Road, who died March 4, 2009.

Our sympathy to the parents and friends of Brandon Dwyer, who died on February 28, 2009.

Congratulations to:

- The Greenbelt Elementary School Destination Imagination Team, the Cyphers, who placed second in last Saturday's regional competition and will advance to the state level competition to be held in April.

- ERHS student Erin Bailey, whose artwork is among 24 county students' works displayed in the Emerging Student Artists exhibit in Annapolis through the end of the legislative session. The exhibit is open to the public from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Legislative Services Building, 90 State Circle through April 19.

A warm welcome to little Athena Marie Bender, born February 6, 2009, to Chelsea Brlansky and Andy Bender, weighing in at 8 lbs., 3 oz. She joins big brother A.J., three years old. The children are fourth-generation Greenbelters. Their grandmother is Carla (Brlansky) Paolucci, great-grandparents Mary and Jim McGraw and great-great grandmother Lorraine Moroney.

Happy 90th birthday to former Outstanding Citizen Mary Linstrom. We loved the charming photo and tribute placed by her children in last Sunday's Washington Post.

Emory Harman would welcome calls and visits from his Greenbelt friends at his new residence, Necitas Assisted Living Home, 13833 Overton Lane, in Silver Spring. The location is near the intersection of New Hampshire Avenue and Randolph Road. Please call 202-413-2209 before visiting.

Send us your reports of new babies, awards, honors, etc. to share with our readers. We'd especially like to hear more from our neighbors in Greenbelt East and Greenbelt West (Springhill Lake/Empirian Village.) To send information for "Our Neighbors" email us at newsreview@greenbelt.com or leave a message at 301-474-6892.

interviewed by a panel of roughly 35 people, one of whom was current Mishkan Torah President Linda Spevack.

Says Spevack, "He shines when he teaches." Cohen's sermons, while relative to a particular Torah reading, are opened to the congregation for discussion. Cohen also likes to visit with the children during their services.

Spevack adds that Cohen is one of the most intellectually honest people she's ever met, which seems to be a collective feeling from those who know him. Spevack also notes that Mishkan Torah is a family-oriented congregation and that Cohen adds to the dynamic. "If you need him, he's there. It doesn't matter what time or where."

Greenbelt Match

"Greenbelt was a good match," says Cohen. "There is something about Greenbelt that is intensely Greenbelt and the whole town has a sense of place and of what it is that makes Greenbelt different."

Cohen's wife, Mona, an epidemiologist on faculty at the University of Maryland, echoes this thought. She says, "We love Greenbelt and we love this congregation." The family, which includes 14-year-old son Reuben, clearly have made their place in the community.

Cohen is a member of the Greenbelt Inter-faith Leadership Association (GILA) which Cohen says is "one of the wonderful things about Greenbelt." Translated into Hebrew, gila means joy, and while the members of GILA do share joyous times, they also share each other's, their respective congregation's and their religious organization's times of sorrow.

GILA mobilized immediately after the events of September 11, 2001, holding a candlelight vigil the very next night. Fellow GILA member Pastor Dan Hamlin of the Greenbelt Community Church (GCC), who spoke at Saturday's dinner, told how Cohen came to the vigil carrying an American flag (although at the time Cohen was still a citizen of Canada).

Hamlin recalls seeing Cohen speaking to Muslim leaders later that night and sharing experiences with them as members of faiths that continually suffer religious persecution.

Ceremony

Saturday's ceremony began with the traditional Havdallah, the ceremony to separate the Sabbath from the rest of the week. Members of the congregation, who had been working for days to prepare the dinner, served it. "The people here are wonderful," says Alice Strausser, one of the many volunteer caterers. "They came out, they filled in and that's why we do it."

Following performances of the American, Canadian and Israeli National Anthems, presented by The Puck Stops Here Chorale, a subset of Mishkan Torah's choir, Cantor Greenfield commenced what easily might have been described as "a roast of Rabbi Cohen." With references to the Montreal Canadians hockey team and Cohen's "legendary singing voice," Greenfield was an entertaining and candid emcee. He poked fun at Cohen while at the same time conveying the general consensus: this is a strongly ethical man.

In other musical interludes, Carolyn Sonnen on flute and Mike Menne on piano played two Bach sonatas. Once again, The Puck

The people at the table are, clockwise: Zachary Bernheisel, Reuben Cohen, Mona Cohen, Jonathan Cohen, Dan Hamlin and Carolyn Sonnen.

Stops Here took the stage and did a Yiddish folk tune and then their own comedic rendition of This Land Is Your Land with added lyrics, "this shul's the place for you and me."

Presentations by the Chesapeake Jewish Reconstructionists, International Jewish Reconstructionist Federation and Jews United for Justice presented awards to Cohen, as did Michael Herman, County Executive Jack Johnson's chief-of-staff who is also a member of the Mishkan Torah congregation. Greenbelt City Council Mayor Pro Tem Rodney Roberts and Councilmember Leta Mach, presented Cohen with a letter memorializing Cohen's significance to the city.

Roberts told the audience that the first time he met Cohen was 10 years ago when he was campaigning door-to-door; Cohen told Roberts he couldn't vote for him because he was not yet an American citizen.

Cohen Roasted

Cohen was roasted further by The Negotiation, a skit performed by David and Evelyn Herschler portraying Cohen and Spevack in a spoof of Cohen's recent contract renewal negotiation. The Herschlers used rhymes and a lot of humor to poke fun at the conversation between the Rabbi and the president on what easily could have been a touchy subject.

"A pastor, a priest and a rabbi walked into a bar..." began GCC Pastor Hamlin as he approached the podium. Though commonly known as the lead-in to many jokes, what Hamlin then informed the attendees was that it was "a pastor, a priest and a rabbi" who, in 1939, formed the Permanent Conference on Religious Life in Greenbelt. This entity became the Greenbelt Clergy Association in 1975. Today it exists as GILA.

Hamlin spoke of how he has "never had a conversation with Jonathan where [he] hasn't learned something." He said that the connection between GCC and Mishkan Torah has deep roots: members of the GCC congregation helped build Mishkan Torah; the lectern in the GCC sanctuary was a gift given by Mishkan Torah in 1951. Solid relationships between the various congregations in Greenbelt and their respective leaders is proof of how the religious life in Greenbelt is, indeed, permanent, he said.

"Mentsch"

President Spevack rounded out the list of speakers paying homage to Cohen by presenting him with the Yivo Encyclopedia of Jews in Eastern Europe. Having polled other members before preparing her words, Spevack spoke on behalf of everyone when she said that, "if the word 'mentsch' [loosely translated from Yiddish for a highly upstanding and ethical person] was in the dictionary, a picture of Jonathan Cohen would be next to it."

When it was his turn Cohen thanked everyone for their part in the night's events from the speakers to the caterers to the person who made the program to the entire committee that planned the gala. He thanked his congregation for the opportunity it had given him to "guide from within." The gratitude and pride were evident, not only with Cohen but also with his wife and son.

Everyone who comes in contact with Rabbi Jonathan Cohen seems to like, admire and respect him and he has many interests outside his faith. Although no one speaks too highly of his singing voice (himself included), his photography has appeared in the News Review and the Labor Day Photo Show. Cohen also has a page on Flickr.com, a photo-sharing website that is open to the public.

In fact, he says he would like to travel with his camera but there are no concrete plans in place and there is a reason for this: "Life is what happens when you're busy making other plans." John Lennon gets credit for the quote but Rabbi Jonathan Cohen gets admiration and respect for living it.

city office so the matter could be investigated. Davis said signatures to the agreement are still needed from publishers of free printed material.

Economic Stimulus

It seems doubtful that Greenbelt will receive money from the recently passed stimulus package despite having a number of "shovel-ready" projects on record, Davis said. Details are still being finalized but it appears that money for road improvements requires the roads to be federally designated. None of the roads in Greenbelt meet that criterion.

Still, Davis said, the governor has said he is trying to spend road money Maryland received from the stimulus for small roads throughout the state, so possibilities may exist for road improvements in the city.

Davis also reported that Congressman Steny Hoyer has announced a $950,000 grant for upgrades to police computer and radios. The city has also been informed of a state grant of $137,000 from a water quality project.

McLaughlin said that, due to the current phase of the county's property tax assessment cycle, Greenbelt should weather the current year's downturn. When property taxes are reassessed starting in Fiscal Year 2011, the city may experience increased budget difficulties if current market conditions persist or worsen.

Other Topics

Though city staff understood that Verizon had contacted the homeowners' associations regarding FiOS installations and services, some associations in Greenbelt East have not been contacted. Others were contacted when Verizon sought permission to enter the property for the purpose of surveying. The process seems to be in very preliminary stages.

Upgrades to three playgrounds in Greenbelt East have been completed. The playground on Ora Glen will be completed this spring and one at Greenwood Village will follow next. Councilmember Leta Mach said Greenwood Village has been asked to look at the plans and a community-built playground along the Kaboom! model has been proposed. Mach noted that when people are involved in this way, they have a greater investment in protecting and maintaining the playground.

Individual members would need to apply to become part of this buying group and would be required to sign a contract for a certain rate for an entire year. Anderson indicated that Pepco users who currently have a contract for electricity with another utility would have to wait for that contract to expire.

Although interest was high, there were questions. Dorrie Bates, president of the cooperative that runs the Co-op grocery store, commented that this is not truly a co-op. She indicated that Greenbelters know co-ops and this is really a buying club where people group solely to buy energy. Anderson agreed with her statement. Lore Rosenthal, a Greenbelt resident, commented that she knew of an energy buying group that bought only wind energy and she would like GHI management to investigate that option also.

Some residents thought that energy rates might be coming down in the future and they would be locked in for a year. Anderson stated that "yes" the rate is set for a year but, in his experience, now is the time to lock in the rate. He anticipates that rates will increase for the summer, not decrease.

GHI members who want to participate can join at any time. As soon as a set number sign up, CQI buys an energy contract for that group. The next people fall into the following group, etc. There is a possibility that other Greenbelters could join the group at a later date. The GHI office has more information and the forms to be completed. Those who want more information online can visit www.cqiassociates.com.

Girl Scouts Make a Difference on World Thinking Day

by Pam Goddard

On February 20 ninety Greenbelt Girl Scouts joined together to celebrate World Thinking Day and to raise funds to help stop the spread of contagious diseases that ravage the world. Brownies, Juniors, Cadettes and Seniors from Scout Service Unit 23-5 studied Ghana, England, Tanzania, France, India, Egypt, Venezuela and the United States to share information on scouting in these countries. Scouts researched each country's culture and customs. The scouts also learned about the status of communicable diseases in these countries and what is being done to stop these diseases.

World Thinking Day is a special day celebrated each year by Girl Scouts and Girl Guides to give thanks and support to Girl Scouts everywhere. The World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts is located in England where scouting was founded by Robert Baden-Powell and his sister Agnes. Juliette Gordon Low, a close friend of the Powells, began Girl Scouting in the United States in 1912. In addition to celebrating scouting, each World Thinking Day has a theme for action. This year's theme is to stop the spread of AIDS, malaria and other diseases.

Combating Malaria

To take action against the spread of disease, the Greenbelt Girl Scouts decided to raise money for Nothing But Nets. Nothing But Nets is a grassroots campaign to save lives by preventing the spread of malaria. Malaria is mainly spread by mosquito bites and kills more than a million people each year. For $10, Nothing But Nets buys and distributes a mosquito net that protects an entire family for up to four years. Every single penny donated goes to the purchase of the nets. The Greenbelt Girl Scouts collected change in a large jar. Each girl contributed enough change to equal the size of her fist which is the size of her heart. By evening's end $350 was raised, enough for 35 mosquito nets.

Greenbelt Girl Scouts pose for a group shot to record their participation in World Thinking Day. The event was designed to raise money to help stop the spread of contagious diseases across the globe. The local troops focused their efforts on malaria with a project entitled "Nothing But Nets."

The girls next participated in a presentation by Greenbelter Kevin Skolnick, who had recently returned from Mozambique where he volunteered with the Peace Corps. The Scouts ended their celebration with an international feast by sharing food from the many countries they had studied. Troops who participated were Brownie Troops 2799, 2871, 2970 and 4128; Junior Troops 1734, 2427 and 5004; Cadette Troops 2307 and 4816; and Senior Troop 127.

Pam Goddard is the leader of Girl Scout Troop 5004.

March Is National Children's Dental Health Month

Linda Collie, a registered dental hygienist at the office of Greenbelt dentist Dennis Hatfield, visited the kindergarten class at NASA Goddard Space Flight Center in recognition of National Children's Dental Health Month. Across the nation children in programs like these were educated about good dental health tools to use every day.

This is the second annual visit to the center by Dr. Hatfield's staff. The children were treated to a story of Dora and her visit to the dentist. Collie then talked to the children about what foods they should be eating for good dental health and demonstrated the proper way to brush.

GES Cyphers Advance To State Competition

Greenbelt Elementary School's Destination Imagination Team, the Cyphers, placed second in the regional competition held on March 7 at Charles Herbert Flowers High School in Springdale and will advance to the state competition on April 18.

Destination Imagination is a problem-solving competition where teams are given a challenge that takes the team three months to complete and an instant challenge that can be done in 10 minutes. This is the first year GES has hosted a team.

The Cyphers chose the challenge that involved building a structure. Their balsa wood construction weighed less than the required 30 grams but held 10 pounds before collapsing.

The team also created a skit that explained why the structure was being tested. The skit plot brings hat salesmen, the Mad Hatters, to ancient Egypt where they want to place a Dr. Seuss hat on top of the pyramid to protect it from the sun's rays.

Hansen writes science books for children. Her books, "How Things Work" and "Wild Animals," are sold not only at the Co-op but also at Barnes & Noble, Costco and Amazon.com. Co-op alone sold close to 100 copies of the former work. Hansen says she has been approached numerous times by neighbors and strangers who tell her how much they and their children love the book.

Her favorite note is from a friend's daughter that read: "I really love your book and my dog does too." Hansen laughed. "I asked [my friend's daughter] about it and she said she read the book to the dog and the dog just lay there so he must have liked it."

Hansen expects to have two new books out within a year. The first one, "Touch the Earth," will be released in spring or early summer. It's a description of the world's biomes — the deserts, grasslands, forests, etc. — for partially sighted students. The book is recorded and will be sold with tactile maps so the students can actually feel how big the Sahara is.

The next, called "Bugs and Bugsicles: Insects in the Winter," is due out in spring 2010. It is a picture book telling the story of several different types of insects getting ready for winter.

Research Pleasures

Other than a general interest in science for kids, not knowing the answer to something sparks Hansen's desire to write about it. "The research is a kind of treasure hunt — finding really interesting pieces of information," she says. She recalls asking herself as a child, "Where do bugs go in winter?" When her own kids asked this same question, she decided to find out.

Hansen does not write as often or as much when her sons are out of school. However, she does find creative and educational projects with them. She ran several Take Apart Parties — where kids disassemble electronics and appliances to investigate how the parts all work together.

She coached the children at her church through the writing of a pageant and has directed several original pageants for the church. She goes into schools and does author visits and writing workshops and she has coached a Destination Imagination Team for the Greenbelt Elementary School this year.

As PTA president at the school, she wrote a grant and received $5,000 from Lowe's Hardware for sound-deadening equipment in the cafeteria ceiling. Hansen also worked at building bridges with Greenbelt Middle School (GMS), starting a GES faculty versus GMS faculty basketball game where everyone could relax and have a good evening. "Building a stronger sense of community with the middle school is still one of my goals for GES and Greenbelt in general," she says, adding that she has been watching carefully the plans for the new GMS building.

Hansen moved to Greenbelt from Takoma Park in the early 1990s and lived in GHI before moving to her current home in Lakeside. She grew up in Wisconsin, though now her parents live in Michigan. She attended Oberlin College in Ohio and landed a job right out of school as a reporter.

She was the only reporter and photographer for a weekly paper similar to the News Review. She also did layout and delivery for this publication — "but not the ads," she laughs. After burning out on the small paper, she went to graduate school at the University of Michigan, studying natural resources and journalism. She then worked for several science organizations including the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the National Science Foundation.

Writes for Kids

Now she writes almost exclusively for kids. "It's more fun," she explains. "With adults you have to be calmer. With kids you can show your excitement and get them excited." She says the Greenbelt Writers Group is a great resource and support for herself as a writer, though she now also belongs to a local professional group called the Children's Writer's Guild.

Her advice for would-be writers is fairly basic — "Don't wait for inspiration, write. It's an exercise and if you do it frequently, you'll get better." As her website states she loves to explore the science of everyday life and to get kids excited about exploring. She is an exciting person and, whether she realizes it or not, she is also an inspiring person.

This month, in celebration of National Women's History Month, the News Review is publishing a series of four interviews to honor Greenbelt women of outstanding achievement.
