Dems Handily Win in City, Ballot Questions Also Win

by James Giese

In Greenbelt, it's déjà vu all over again (as Yogi Berra would say), at least as far as its continued support for Democratic candidates. President Barack Obama once again achieved 86 percent of the votes cast over his Republican opponent, Mitt Romney, two minor party candidates and a slew of write-in wannabes. Senator Ben Cardin slightly improved his percentage over his Republican opponent Dan Bongino and Independent Rob Sobhani, garnering 77 percent of votes cast and 5th Congressional District Representative Steny Hoyer obtained a healthy 84 percent of votes cast, although that was a drop of 4 percent over his 2008 vote percentage.

The Greenbelt election results do not include counts from early voting. Adding these votes might benefit the Democrats here even more. Unofficial state tallies, with many precincts still unreported, indicate that Democrats turned out early in much greater numbers, percentage-wise, than Republicans.

Ballot Questions

The four most controversial ballot questions also won in Greenbelt. The strongest support was for Question 4, the Maryland Dream Act, which will enable resident immigrants to enroll in state universities and community colleges at resident tuition rates. It garnered 77 percent of the votes cast in support. Also strongly supported was the approval of the state redistricting plan for Congressional districts. That garnered 71 percent. Greenbelters also strongly supported the marriage ballot questions which will enable couples of the same sex to marry. That question achieved 67 percent support.

(At press time, the marriage bill appeared to be winning statewide by a narrow margin but losing by a narrow margin in Prince George's County.)

Question 7, to permit a gambling casino in Prince George's County, also carried by a 55 percent vote. Interestingly, that

Election 2012

A Time of Perpetual Reflection

by Jim Link

An enjoyable ramble around Greenbelt to all five of its polling precincts generated a wealth of pithy comments.

At Greenbelt Elementary School, Sylvia O'Brien exclaimed, "Yes, thank God!" when I asked her if she was glad the campaign was over. Her grand niece Jasmine Denton, age 18, voted for the first time. "I was nervous," she admitted.

Jeanette Grotke, a campaign volunteer thought the presidential race was "offensive generally, too long, a bombardment of trivia and sob stories."

Her fellow volunteer Michael Hartman said "I'm not campaigning for Obama; I'm campaigning for marriage equality." He said that voters he approached in Bowie during the early voting period were not hostile, actually joked around with him. "Civility is so important."

Hallie Ahearn said "I'm relieved (that the campaign is over). I just can't believe that 47 percent of American voters are listening to a non-platform."

You do the parsing, gentle reader. Michael Christ was more reserved – "The line is too long; I'll come back later."

Trudy Renwick said "I thought the election workers did a great job. I have a tremendous amount of respect for them." Marjorie Spier said, "Oh my God, I need to tell you I'm delighted with the quickness and efficiency here."

Mary Ann Baker claimed that voting, even with a long wait, "is a great way to meet your friends and neighbors in a warm place where you can schmooze." "Thank God it's over," added her husband Bob.

At Greenbelt Community Center Lauren Cummings, an election watcher, "challenger" and campaign volunteer said she helped to see that the polls opened on time, can find out how many have voted anytime during the day and distributed information in favor of Question 6, marriage equality. "Good morning, vote for 6!" she chirped at a briskly passing voter, pressing pertinent info into his hands as deftly as RGIII gives the ball to Evan Royster.

"Fairness and equality," Cummings said, turning back to me,

"that's my script – I practiced all night." Voter Ethan Tabor said, "The workers were great. The lines were longer than I expected."

Election official Deema Slim said, "They (the voters) are all excited. I think the process is pretty efficient. Everyone is so civil."

Moi: "The voters or the officials?" Slim, smiling: "Well, both."

Barbara Ransom claimed the campaign was saturated "with too many commercials. You can hang up on robocalls but you can't just turn off your TV."

Barbara Shelton emphasized that she "won't be happy it's over until I know who won and we get a better economy."

At Springhill Lake Elementary School (SHLES), campaign volunteer Sean Anthony had the most enviable election job in all of Greenbelt. Handing out propaganda, the 30-ish Anthony was surrounded by three beautiful fellow volunteers – Charmaine Ferrell, Ashley Cristwell

Letters to the Editor

Three Cheers, News Review

Although our community was blessed with no severe damage from Hurricane Sandy, I played it safe – glad to hunker down inside my home accomplishing personal business while my other activities were cancelled.

Yet each day I witnessed my mail lady living up to the famous quote, "Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

And now today, with delivery of this week's paper, I see that the dedicated staff of the News Review didn't enjoy the same break as I did. Thank you and congratulations to everyone involved in bringing our community the News Review and maintaining the incredible record of never missing an issue in 75 years!

Praise for Eric Zhang's Blog

Have you seen Eric Zhang's remarkable photo blog documenting Greenbelt's 75th anniversary year? If not, I heartily recommend giving it a look at <http://greenbelt2012.wordpress.com/> or, if you don't have a computer, asking someone who does or check it out on the public computers at the Greenbelt Library.

Zhang, who not only works full-time but has a young family, has spent this year photographing Greenbelt and its many activities (and characters). What I love about this particular blog, in addition to its comprehensiveness and detail, is the unbiased prose. As a newcomer to the community, he has no agenda, no axe to grind. If there's something you've always wondered about, an event or place here, chances are you'll find it in the blog, as well as occasional shots of Greenbelt's natural beauty.

The idea behind the project per Zhang's words was, "to produce a photographic record of Greenbelt in 2012 as the FSA [Federal Security Administration] photographers [...] did during the early years of the town's history." The blog accomplishes that and then some. It's a tremendous gift to Greenbelt and it'll make you fall for this town anew. Many thanks.

Corrections

Last week on page 3 we announced a meeting this Sunday, November 11, at the New Deal Café. The film, "War Dance," will not be shown until February. The Sunday meeting is actually a planning meeting for the Africa issues focus. Please see information about the November 11 meeting on page 9.

The News Review regrets the error.

The article on the newly sworn-in police officers on page 10 last week incorrectly attributed the reporter. The author of the piece was Barbara Hopkins. The News Review regrets the error.

In Memoriam

In W.Va., Death Catches Up to a Local Boy

Rick Ransom

Peter Ladnier, who spent his childhood in Greenbelt, died on November 1 in West Virginia, which was where he spent the better part of his adult years. He was 55 years old. He was living in the small mountain community of Shannondale within the official border of Harpers Ferry but really closer to Charles Town. His place was close to both the Potomac and Shenandoah Rivers, where he could pursue his life-long passions of fishing and hunting. However, he wasn't doing much of either the last couple of years as he was fighting a continuing battle with heart aneurysms and cancer. He had become legally blind from a tumor on the optic nerve and had trouble walking from cancer in his hip.

Pete's family moved to Greenbelt not long after his birth after living in Laurel. I met Pete some 40 years ago when I lived in the 3 Court of Research Road, where his mother, the late Ann Ladnier, lived with her four kids. His dad had already died from the same problem with aneurysms (as did his grandfather and great-grandfather, as well as his sister Diane King). He is survived by an older sister, Mary Lou of Germantown and an older brother Charles, who is now living in Dunkirk, Md. Pete attended St Hugh's Elementary and Greenbelt Junior High.

I visited Pete with Lee Dorsey, John McBride, John O' Brien and Pat Fern on several occasions. Despite his physical incapacities, he always wanted to go into Charles Town to the coffee shop and get a bite to eat. He would loudly proclaim to the waitresses in the shop how his friends from Greenbelt had come up to see him. Now mind you, our visitation to most places would hardly be marked, but to Pete it was a big event indeed. Pete would also come back to Greenbelt for special occasions like Labor Day and to see the "Good Guys" Band. Since he could no longer drive, his life-long friend Councilmember Rodney Roberts would ride up to his home, pick him up, bring him down and take him back all in the same day. It's a Greenbelt thing, I guess. Rodney had just taken him to a crab feast a couple of weeks ago.

Pete was a first-class machinist who worked at Pressure Sciences Lab in Beltsville, the Washington Star and the Washington Post. He related to me on one of our visits that he met a shop owner over in the Beltsville Industrial Park who hired him and taught him his trade. He spent the last 15 years of his professional life working at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the federal government. He was most proud of his work on plates for producing bills of currency. When his eyesight failed he had to give that up.

The reason I chose the headline above is because in knowing Pete and in talking to his brother Charlie, he apparently ran just a few steps ahead of death for much of his life. John McBride noted it seemed Pete often wore a cast or a sling. As Charlie said, "Pete did what he wanted to do when he wanted to do it," regardless of the potential consequences. Charlie mused that Pete's lifestyle did not encourage long-term relationships which is why he felt Pete had never married and had children. Pete's escapades began when he was two years old and broke his hip and thigh bone sleigh-riding down Research Road to Hillside. Charlie went on to note that he had survived two head-on auto collisions and numerous other broken bones and contusions, as well as several bouts with his illnesses. He rode a motorcycle and also survived a crash on it in his youth that resulted from being chased by police for speeding here in town, as Rodney tells it.

As his sister Mary Lou remarked, "Pete didn't have a bucket list"; Pete 'lived' a bucket list. Charlie detailed a few of the things he pursued including being a passenger in a fighter plane, skydiving (six jumps to qualify to jump solo) and riding in a NASCAR race car. He also liked to go deep-water diving near his home as well as in Florida and Jamaica.

Pete certainly did not die a rich man, but his life was rich with experiences. When I would ask how he was doing (knowing at least part of the answer), he would always say he had his problems "but there are many worse off than me!" Mary Lou noted that she never remembers him saying "poor me." He was a stubborn guy with a good understanding for other people's troubles. Rodney stated that Pete was the same guy his whole life, never changing or varying for anyone or anything. To Rodney that was a good trait in a way. He was happy to see you, literally if not in actuality. He celebrated the band as often as he could, so we felt it only right to have a celebration for him.

Join the "Good Guys" on Saturday, November 24 from 8 to 11:30 p.m. at the Greenbelt American Legion for a night of music and conversation full of memories of Pete and all things Greenbelt. Mary Lou and Charlie expect to attend so you can express the condolences you did not get to share in a more formal setting.

and her mother Kim Cristwell —like 'Christ' without the 'h.' Moi: "You are one lucky guy." Anthony (no relation to Carmelo Anthony of the New York Knicks): "I am a king . . ." ". . . among your queens," added Ferrell, both smiling.

"It was worth the wait," said a woman who identified herself only as Carla Jean, scurrying away. "How long?" I asked. "Two and a half hours!" Carla Jean shouted over her shoulder.

Two first-time voters, Katrina Johnson, 20, and Christine Gee, 18, said they had already been waiting two hours. Would they vote in favor of Question 6 (marriage equality)? Johnson said, "Yes"; Gee said, "Maybe."

Theodore Wilson was one probing, curious voter filled with questions about the process. He was convinced that the long wait could have been avoided. "Why are there only two e-poll machines (which store registered voters' names) here? Is it the budget? The demographic? We want to know why but they won't answer us. Why isn't the new Greenbelt Middle School used as a polling place? It's much bigger than here." His friend Tiara Mallory nodded in agreement.

Rob Hunter, Aruna Kamara and Kyana Robinson wore spiffy blue "Election Protection" T-shirts and explained that their job was to "resolve problems, answer questions, give direction and explain the rules."

The most exotic voter at SHLES had to be Leon Dunkley, who retrieved his guitar from his car when he realized the wait would try everyone's patience. As he strummed away, his adjacent neighbor, Ruenette Frasier said, "He's entertaining us, helpin' us endure the line."

At Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) Mary Potter exclaimed "Thank God it's over! A 45-minute wait — not bad at all." Potter's articulacy grew. "I respect the election workers enormously. Most voters don't have any idea how hard they work. My daughter Anne, an ERHS grad, by the way, is a voter registrar in Richmond . . . I'm sorry to say it, but campaigns are never really over. Watch, the fundraising will start tomorrow! The business of America is electioneering, not business. Think of all the worthy causes that could have benefited from using the money spent on candidates. It could have fed so many people,

At 9 a.m. Springhill Lake Elementary School (Precinct 8) had a line of voters extending out from the gym and down a hallway. At 8 p.m. Tuesday the News Review reporter learned there was still a two-hour-long line of voters. The results didn't get to the newspaper until midnight.

educated so many people . . . Well, ciao!"

Outside ERHS I joshed with a genteel, grandmotherly woman, a Democrat party campaign volunteer. Moi: "Is everyone behaving inside? Any riots?" Genteel volunteer: "Not riotous at all. There were long lines early this morning, maybe a one and a half hour wait, but now it's quick." Moi: "And your name is . . .?" Genteel volunteer: "Jane Ross." Moi, joking: "Any relation to Justin Ross (recently retired state delegate)?" Jane Ross: "I'm Justin's mom."

After Ms. Ross raved a bit about her four extraordinary grandchildren, I scurried inside ERHS where Sheila Mugabe and her husband Benon, two election officials, graciously gave me a quick tour of the efficient operation.

My little odyssey brought me at last to Turning Point Academy, where a campaign volunteer pressed propaganda into my hand. This unusual, only slightly exaggerated dialogue, ensued. Moi: "Can I have your name?" Volunteer: "Sure. Justin Ross." Moi: "Any relation to Jane Ross?"

"Sure. I'm Jane's son." Inside I asked exiting voter Gabriela Navarro if the line was long. She said "It was an hour long when I came to vote the first time. But this time it's only 20 minutes long." "What candor!" I thought, as did Mike Plane, standing nearby. After I probed a bit, Gabriela and her daughter Alysha Navarro-Henry laughed at our simplicity. Gabriela had left to pick up her son and returned to vote later — once. Alysha had driven three hours from Morgantown, West Virginia, where she is a student at WVU to vote at Turning Point — she had forgotten to mail her absentee ballot. All three voters were convinced that even if Question 7 passed and a casino were built at National Harbor, no money would reach our schools. "It's a lie," said mother and daughter. "I agree. It's a lie," Mike added.

Chief Judge Clyde Davis and his trusty crew of Jonathan, Glory, Karen, Chris, Kesha and Kisha had everything humming along beautifully. "Is Judge Davis a good boss?" I asked. "Sometimes," said Kesha.

On my way out I bumped into our noble city councilmember Ed Putens. Moi: "Can I get a quote, sir?" Putens: "You know what's more important to me right now? My grandkids. They just voted . . . Now where are they? . . ." Putens ambled off and so did I.

In conclusion, let me share the two most striking comments I culled. First, when I asked Bill Orleans at the Community Center if he was happy the campaign was over, he said, "No! I think every day should be an election day!" Moi: "Why?" Bill: "Because I'm in favor of perpetual reflection."

And last, I asked Dawn Green, ensconced at the very end of a long labyrinthine line at Springhill Lake, if she knew that she would have a two and a half hour wait. She answered "I am prepared to wait for however long it takes to vote." Moi: "Why?" Green: "Because it's our civic duty! Our forefathers and foremothers fought and died for us to be able to do this."

And her pal Andrea Adgerson added, "Amen to that!"

is the same percentage that the gambling question to permit slots in Maryland was carried in 2008. Incomplete voting returns indicate that this question will pass in both the county and statewide. Voter turnout was down significantly at the polling places. This might be accounted for by a greater turnout for early voting. In 2008, early voting was first offered to state voters. Early election returns show that some 430,000 Marylanders voted early out of a total vote count in excess of 2,000,000.

The Turning Point Academy

precinct had the lowest percentage turnout at 51 percent with the Springhill Lake Elementary School precinct second lowest at 54 percent. The highest turnout at the polling place went to the Greenbelt North End voting at Greenbelt Elementary, with a 65 percent turnout.

Romney received his strongest Greenbelt support from Greenbelt Elementary with 290 votes cast for him. The core of Greenbelt (Community Center and Greenbelt Elementary) opposed the gambling question. Greenbelt East and Greenbelt West supported it.

Community Visioning Event Set for Nov. 17

In celebration of Greenbelt's 75th anniversary, the Greenbelt City Council will host community visioning sessions on Saturday, November 17 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. These sessions will provide an opportunity to celebrate Greenbelt's legacy by helping "vision its future" by contributing ideas and suggestions on how to make Greenbelt "the best community it can be."

Sessions will be held at the same time in three locations for the convenience of everyone. Locations will be 1) Springhill Lake Recreation Center, 6101 Springhill Drive; 2) Greenbriar Community Building, 7600 Hanover Parkway; and 3) Municipal Building, 25 Crescent Road.

Participants will be able to share their vision for the Greenbelt community going forward. Questions to be addressed are: What do you see as the most important and pressing community issues over the next three to five years? What should the city's major focus be in the coming years? What do you want Greenbelt to be like in 20 years?

Council Hears Replacement Plan for Bridge

by Patrick Donohue

The Prince George's County Department of Public Works and Transportation (DPW&T) presented its plan for a replacement Sunnyside Avenue Bridge Project in Beltsville to the Greenbelt City Council at its Wednesday, October 10 worksession in the Greenbelt Community Center.

James Wilson, chief of the Highways and Bridges Division for DPW&T, and Susan Hubbard, the department's public information officer, representing the county, outlined their plan for replacing the bridge on Sunnyside Avenue near the road's intersection with Edmonston Road.

The entire council, present at the meeting, had plenty of interest in the project. They had many questions about construction, environmental impact functionality and funding. Some even questioned the overall reasoning behind the bridge project.

"There are all sorts of rumors rife about why the bridge is being built," Greenbelt's Mayor Judith Davis said to open the meeting, "even though we know that in that particular area there has been talk of a bridge being built for some time now. But the last time I heard about the bridge it was too expensive and was never going to be built in our lifetime. All of a sudden there are funds."

The current bridge is a small structure, about 50 feet in length, Wilson said. He cited the bridge's structural deficiencies and flooding history as reasons for doing the project.

Flooding History

"The fact that it is a small structure with a bad flooding history allows this project to qualify for federal aid under the Federal Highway Bridge Repair-Replacement Program, which states that every structure in the United States over 20 feet in length is required to be inspected once every two years by federal law," Wilson said. "Based on these federal and formal bridge inspections, each bridge gets a Bridge Sufficiency Rating (BSR) that goes from 0-100 and bridges with ratings less than 50 qualify for participation in the federal aid, bridge replacement program. This bridge on Sunnyside Avenue is below 50 and therefore is eligible."

The new bridge would be about 385 feet long and include traffic lanes in both directions as well as a shoulder, bike lane and sidewalk on each side of the road.

"The county incorporates all of those features into our projects; they all have benefits," Wilson said, "The county's complete guidelines strongly encourage multimodal options that are important for the traveling public."

Council, however, expressed its concern that drivers will then use the widened road as a 4-lane highway and drive on the shoulder, creating unsafe traveling conditions.

They proposed the possibility of rearranging the lanes to make them safer and Hubbard and Wilson seemed open to the idea. In fact, Councilmember Silke Pope even suggested European-style roadways that would have both bike lanes and sidewalks on one side of the road and a median dividing them from the traffic lanes.

Wetlands Concern

One of council's primary concerns throughout the meeting was the project's impact on wetlands surrounding Sunnyside Avenue.

County representatives spoke of mitigation taking place for storm water management and to help preserve the wetlands as much as possible.

But even the mayor said that the project seems all man – and bicyclist – centered and very destructive to Indian Creek.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts was one of the strongest advocates for wetland preservation. "Avoiding construction," he said, is the best way to mitigate.

"I think the wetland is of most importance; we have to protect the wetland. You can fix the road and maybe even fix the flooding without destroying the wetland, in my opinion." Roberts was one of the councilmembers who questioned motives behind the project. He alluded to the fact that many believe that the county's reasoning behind this project is related to the possibility of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) relocating to the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center property.

"It's not a bridge replacement," Roberts said, "it all goes back to facilitate the development that the county wants to send to BARC. They not only want to widen Sunnyside, they want to widen Kenilworth. Everyone knows what the aim of the state and the county is and that's to widen the roadways."

Underhanded

Roberts said he has had his suspicions from the early stages of this project.

"The thing that really has me upset about this is the fact that from the very beginning, it was done underhandedly," Roberts said. "I don't know if it was illegal but it was definitely unethical. They appeared before the Council of Governments Transportation Planning Board and said this was just a bridge replacement project, which means it is exempt from the air quality conformity and other requirements because they say they are just taking one out and putting one in just like the old one."

"I at least want to see it go through the appropriate channels," he said. "I don't want to see things undercut because when you do that it lessens the public input on the project. They should be honest about what they want to do with it. If they want FBI at BARC, they should say this is what we want and allow the public to weigh in and say we accept it or we don't accept it."

Despite community and council concern for the project, Wilson said the project is moving forward on a pretty normal track. He estimated that construction might begin in about 18 months to two years.

Wilson added that it is "very common for community groups to have interest in projects so that the department does everything it can to get feedback from the community."

Council will refer the bridge replacement project to the Advisory Planning Board for their review and opinion.

Frank Pearlman's 80th birthday will be celebrated along with the city's 75th anniversary at a reception and social hosted by Mishkan Torah Synagogue on November 17.

Mishkan Torah Throws A Dual Birthday Bash

On Saturday, November 17 at 7 p.m. Mishkan Torah Synagogue will celebrate both the city's 75th anniversary and the 80th birthday of Mishkan Torah member extraordinaire Frank Pearlman.

A reception and social will be followed by city guest speakers including Mayor Judith Davis and Councilmember Leta Mach and Sheila Maffay-Tuthill discussing the Greenbelt Museum's newly-installed Greenbelt Timeline exhibit. Speakers will then reminisce about Pearlman, an active member of the community and of the synagogue.

Two organizations that Pearlman has been involved with for many years will be present to honor him. Julia Frank from GAIL and Golden Age Club President Cathie Brannan will speak. Synagogue presentations to Pearlman will be followed by giving him a last "final say." The rest of the gala evening will feature Mishkan Torah artists with some of Pearlman's favorite Broadway and Hollywood music.

Pearlman and his late wife Alice were pillars of Mishkan Torah for 52 years; he has held numerous synagogue offices over the years, during and after his stage career.

There is a fee; see ad on page 7.

Argo's the "Best Bad Idea" Gets a Rousing Ride Here

by Eli Flam

Clapping at a movie? On opening weekend at Old Greenbelt Theatre – Friday, November 2 and Saturday, November 3 – many in the goodly-sized audiences did so as "Argo" tautened toward the end.

It's early 1980, and CIA's Tony Mendez flies into hectic Tehran to smuggle out six Americans holed up in the Canadian Embassy. Militants have taken over the U.S. Embassy and tied up the 53 other American personnel. Mendez is supposed to be a film producer, searching with the half dozen – disguised as Canadian filmmakers – for a putative sci-fi film site.

Played to a fare-thee-well by Ben Affleck (also the director), he has to battle the home office – they call his plan "the best bad idea" – as well as deal with many a wrought-up Iranian.

Did it really happen as seen on the larger-than-life screen? How much does that matter to an audience caught up in the tense action?

Mark Lijek, one of the half-dozen, says in the October issue of The Foreign Service Journal that "a dramatization based on true events" can't substitute for history. (Ditto, says this reviewer for a slew of other "based on" feature films.) And if you want to learn this real story, says Lijek, read Robert A. Wright's "Our Man in Tehran: The Truth Behind the Secret Mission to Save Six Americans during the Iran Hostage Crisis and the Ambassador Who Worked with the CIA to Bring Them Home" (Harper Collins, 2010).

In the meantime, this deeply-imbued Hollywood production plunges ahead daily at the Old Greenbelt Theatre through November 22, drawing many viewers.

At the end of the film, Mendez's boss tells him that President Jimmy Carter called Mendez a great American.

"A great American what?" asks Mendez.

"He didn't say."

Free Birding Lecture On Borneo, Malaysia

On Tuesday, November 13 at 7:30 p.m., at the College Park Airport Annex, Dave and Maureen Harvey share tales and photos from their birding adventures in June in Borneo and Malaysia.

They saw about 320 bird species, of which about 280 were "lifers" – a lot of lifers for a couple who have birded in the far corners of the earth. Maureen is president of the Maryland Ornithological Society (MOS); both are known for fine birding skills and long service to MOS and the Carroll County Bird Club. The talk is sponsored by the Patuxent Bird Club, Prince George's MOS chapter and the Prince George's Audubon Society.

College Park Airport Annex is at 1909 Cpl. Frank Scott Drive. More information is available at 301-262-5148 or www.pgaudubon.org.

Café Meeting to Plan African Programs

On Sunday, November 11 at 1 p.m. there will be a meeting at the New Deal Café to plan a series of programs on Africa over coming months. The series is sponsored by the Peace and Justice Coalition. (Note that the meeting is for planning, with no film to be shown, as mistakenly stated in last week's News Review.)

In February the award-winning film "War Dance," selected by nearly two dozen American and African Greenbelters, will be screened as a highlight of the New Deal Café series.

Other future programs suggested so far include developing a project to assist especially vulnerable groups in Africa, eating at a nearby African café, reading a classic novel depicting how colonialism undermined African culture and watching and discussing videos on Africa-centered topics like sexual violence, how smart phones are creating violence in rural Africa and poverty and economic development. Additional suggestions will be sought at the meeting.

Anyone interested in the programs but unavailable November 11 is asked to email edfallon@gmail.com.

After Storm Effects, GES Students Unwind

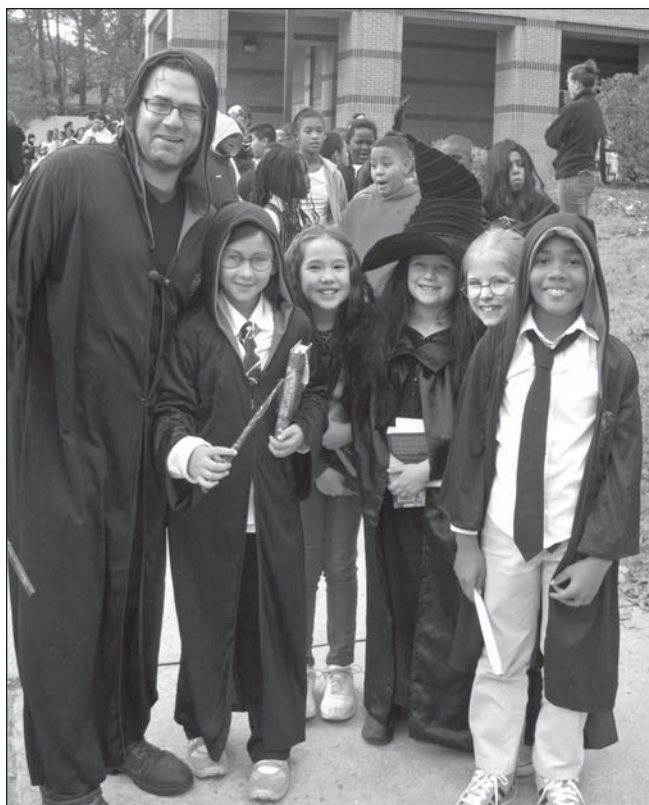

by Anne Gardner

On Wednesday, October 31 parents and neighbors of Greenbelt Elementary School (GES) were treated to the sight of almost 600 princesses, pirates, witches, wizards and other storybook characters marching around the outside of the school building in the second annual Storybook Parade.

Despite the disruption of Hurricane Sandy on the previous two days, the school staff and students were inventive in creating costumes to portray characters from their favorite books.

Principal turned ladybug Monica Gaines leads the parade.

Obama Dominates Votes In Annual Pumpkin Poll

by Doug Love

After my cousin Roseerin and I cast early votes on Halloween, we came home and prepared for the onslaught of Trick-Or-Treaters. The pumpkins were set, the "Vote" pumpkin next to my 49-lb. portrait of the six presidential candidates. I wore my winter suit and sat with a vat of chocolate eyeballs and my laptop reading Poe, the Brothers Grimm, John Christian Anderson and others.

As almost everyone knows, I offer the kids a piece of candy of their choice, then ask them, "If you could vote next Tuesday, who would you vote for?" This scares many sufficiently that "no answer" is usually second place, but usually first is "Mommy" or "Happy Halloween." This year there was a definite pattern to responses I haven't seen in all the years I have conducted this poll.

My first visitor at 6:30 proudly said, "Obama," but her brother said nothing. For the next two hours, trick-or-treaters of all ages came in clumps, so I only needed to explain the procedure to the first few in a bunch. After an hour we had 24 voters, then after another hour, 71. Since there were no voters after 8 p.m., I closed the polls at 8:40.

Obama dominated the election with 40 of 71 votes cast, or 56 percent. Second place was "not a word" or "silence," with 7 votes or under 10 percent.

Third was Mitt Romney with six votes, 8 percent. Fourth was "I don't know" with 4 votes or 5.6 percent. Following the two votes for "You!" were one vote each for Jill Stein, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, chocolate, Hi!, "not me," fireman, undecided voter, Mickey Mouse, Trick or Treat, Mommy and Santa.

Santa (Nev.) and Jill Stein (Mass.) are legitimate candidates this year. So were Rocky Anderson (Wisc.), Gary Johnson (Ariz.) and Virgil Good (Way-Soth'n Virginia) but none of these received a vote here, although someone recognized Virgil Good on my pumpkin.

I was glad to see the green candidate get 1.5 percent of the vote but most people in Greenbelt will be relieved to see our youth are following the popular trend across the nation to be vastly for President Obama.

NWVC Programs on Animals, Puppet Show

At the National Wildlife Visitor Center (NWVC) on Wednesday, November 14 from 1 to 2:30 p.m. kids ages 5 to 7 will learn how animals survive the winter.

Some animals migrate or hibernate for the winter but some just stick it out. Discover how they to do it. Take a hike to look for blue jays, squirrels, nut-hatches and other forest animals busy storing nuts, followed by a nutty craft project.

Advance registration is required by calling 301-497-5887.

Little Whooper's Excellent Adventure Puppet Show will be held on Friday, November 16 at 10:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. at the National Wildlife Visitor Center.

Follow the life of a very special endangered whooping crane who learns to migrate with the help of human friends and meet the characters after the 20-minute show.

This program is for all ages, with no registration necessary. The Visitor Center is located on Powder Mill Road between the B-W Parkway and Rt. 197.
