Snow turned Greenbelt into a fairyland Monday with white puffs on all the twigs. Most of the grass was covered but the warm streets resisted. By Tuesday noon spring was back.

Former Greenbelt Resident Opens New Jersey Mike's

by Altoria Bell Ross

Three Greenbelt schools shared more than $3,000 this week orchestrated by former Greenbelter Kyle Yancey, director of operations at Jersey Mike's Subs. During its grand opening at Beltway Plaza last week, customers each donated $1 to the area's schools in exchange for a sandwich. Yancey, who grew up in Old Greenbelt and went to Eleanor Roosevelt High School, donated $1,124 each to Greenbelt Elementary, Greenbelt Middle and Roosevelt High schools.

Upon high school graduation, Yancey studied interpersonal communications at Salisbury University on the Eastern Shore. When he graduated in 2008, Yancey bartended in Hyattsville before joining Jersey Mike's. Yancey worked as a general manager there for three years and has been director of operations for a year and a half.

In addition to opening stores, the 27-year-old oversees locations in Greenbelt, Laurel, Gaithersburg, Germantown and Frederick.

Yancey hopes when customers frequent the restaurant they will enjoy the ambience by smelling the baking bread, listening to the upbeat music, viewing the flat screen television and interacting with the high-energy, fun-loving team of employees.

Soccer Player

Growing up, Yancey, who played soccer and was coached by the city's treasurer, Jeff Williams, said his favorite place was Generous Joe's. Although Yancey no longer resides in Greenbelt, his sister, Miss Greenbelt Caroline Casey, brother Alec Casey, parents Katherine Wellborn and Chris Casey and his aunt still live here. Caroline and Alec also hold a job he once performed – delivering the News Review.

Easter Sunrise Service Planned

An ecumenical Easter sunrise service will be held on Sunday, March 31 at 7 a.m. at Buddy Attick Park.

The rain location will be the Greenbelt Community Church, Hillside and Crescent Road. Bring a lawn chair or blanket to the park.

Anthony Lewis 1927 – 2013

News items about the life of journalist Anthony Lewis, who died March 25, tell of his first Pulitzer prize in 1955 when Lewis was 28. While he was writing for the Washington Daily News, he had covered the story of a Greenbelt man who was suspended from the Navy Department as a security risk during the heyday of Senator Joseph McCarthy's Un-American Activities Committee. The subject, Abraham Chasanow, was one of five Greenbelt men working for the Navy Department that were suspended, including the News Review's Isadore Parker.

"Mr. Lewis received the full support of his newspaper in championing an American citizen . . . against an unjust act by a government department," the Pulitzer citation read, according to reporter Emily Langer in the March 26 Washington Post. "This is the best tradition of American journalism." Lewis went on to a successful career writing for the New York Times, winning a second Pulitzer in 1963.

His story about Chasanow became the basis for the movie Three Brave Men.

Greenbelt Librarian Ellen Utley Will Retire in April

by Altoria Bell Ross

Ellen Utley's personal mantra is to bloom where you are planted, so it is entirely appropriate that she is retiring this spring from the Prince George's County Memorial Library System after 38 years of sowing seeds of literacy in Greenbelt and in the surrounding community.

The longest serving Greenbelt Branch Manager is proud of the soil she has cultivated in nearly 13 years of service in the city. Utley, who earned a master's degree in library sciences from The Catholic University of America, has built up the library's circulation with the staff's help to 35,000 circulating materials a month, sometimes ranking fourth or fifth in the county. She said this feat has been accomplished in part by displaying books in an attractive manner throughout the library, using wall mounts and other creative presentations. Utley said she has also promoted the Tugwell collection.

Another library accomplishment was being able to provide services to patrons during the library's 2010 renovation. Four full-time staff checked out and requested books not at the mini library for patrons in a small room in the Community Center for six months. Despite the space limitations, Utley said, the library still circulated 10,000 materials monthly. "It was challenging but very satisfying," she said, citing the public's patience as a success in the endeavor and the staff's opportunity to get

Lessons from My Family, What They Brought Me

by Marat Moore

Now that I'm "a woman of a certain age" – a phrase I haven't heard applied to men – it has become clearer to me how social forces shape our personal history before our births and throughout our lives. We may be born into conditions that lead us to a social movement that, in turn, connects us to other struggles. For me, learning about the women's movement in high school led to community organizing in Appalachia and the labor movement – and to the women miners within it.

Recently the women's movement has been in the media spotlight with last month's three-hour PBS documentary, "The Makers," about women who shaped the debate in the last 50 years; the anniversary suffrage march; and the 50th anniversary of the publication of Betty Friedan's The Feminine Mystique. My favorite was the PBS film, which showed the creativity and hilarity in some of the protest strategies and admitted the mistakes of the movement in not including and addressing the needs of women of color and the working class.

Revisiting that history pushed me to think beyond my own experience to the women of my family. Women's history is larger in scope than feminism or the women's movement and it has helped me grasp more fully the struggles and achievements of the women on my maternal side beginning with great-grandmother Mattie. The storyline evolved through my grandmother Elsie, my mother Geraldine ("Jerry") and me.

Mattie's full name was Martha Elizabeth Ward Hoffman and she was the daughter of a Methodist minister in Cincinnati who fought for the Union in the Civil War. She married a writer from South Carolina and they moved from Ohio to New York City where he worked for the New York Tribune.

Support Autism Work

I read with great interest the article about Julie Watson and her work with young, autistic students and their teachers in the county. Having worked with people with autism, I know how difficult it can be. But I also know that much can be accomplished. We need to give our fullest support to Julie Watson and her valuable work.

Puppetry Cabaret Will Be Artful Afternoon Focus

The City of Greenbelt Recreation Department's monthly free Artful Afternoon program will be held on Sunday, April 7 from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Greenbelt Community Center. It will feature a puppetry cabaret performance by visiting artists and a printmaking workshop with a local artist, along with a chance to buy locally made pottery at bargain prices. Activities are kid-friendly and open to all.

The afternoon begins at 1 p.m. with a printmaking workshop with artist-in-residence Nora Simon, who will lead participants in creating unique, colorful patterns using fresh fruits and vegetables. Supplies will be provided.

At 3 p.m. Leila Ghaznavi and Spencer Lott will perform Ghaznavi's puppetry cabaret "Beyond the Light." The Philadelphia-based artists combine shadow puppetry and dance to create a mysterious world of magic, love, triumph and loss. Performed with humor and pathos, primarily using flashlights and L.E.D. light sources, the performance illuminates two souls' struggle to find each other in the darkness of their own minds.

Other Artful Afternoon activities include the Greenbelt Pottery Group sale from 1 to 4 p.m. in Room 114. The sale will be a great bargain-hunting opportunity featuring seconds that are not quite perfect to the artist's eye but appear just perfect to the buyer. Hidden gems of 20 potters will be included; come early for the best selection. In addition the studio open house with the Community Center's nine artists-in-residence offers inspiration in many styles and media, along with opportunities to purchase unique gifts.

The Greenbelt Museum's current exhibit "Greenbelt: The First 75 Years," an interactive timeline celebrating the city's first 75 years, continues on exhibit at the Community Center. Figuration sculptures by artist Matthew Janson are displayed in the Gallery. This colorful exhibit for all ages, especially those interested in science fiction, continues through April 12.

Across the street tours of the Greenbelt Museum historic house at 10-B Crescent are available for a nominal fee from 1 to 5 p.m.

Drawing

A free drawing will be held at 2 p.m. for a $15 gift certificate for the Greenbelt Pottery Group's "Seconds Sale" or two tickets to the show of the winner's choice at the Greenbelt Arts Center. Entries can be made online through 1:30 p.m. on Sunday, April 7 at www.greenbeltmd.gov/arts or in person at the Community Center Art Gallery.

Israel's "Gatekeepers" Speak Out

Opening at Old Greenbelt Theatre on Friday, March 29 is "The Gatekeepers," a startling, candid documentary in which six former heads of Israel's vaunted secret service – the Shin Bet – talk with few, or any, holds barred about their successes, failures and often trenchant second thoughts. Its timeliness is underscored by exacerbating tensions in the Middle East and the latest looming round in the so-far intractable efforts to find a peaceful solution to the Israel-Palestine standoff.

Director Dror Moreh has drawn out a coruscating range of responses from these Shin Bet leaders in this one-of-a-kind film.

PG-13. Running time: 97 minutes.

Obituaries

Catherine O'Brien

Longtime Greenbelt resident Catherine O'Brien died peacefully on March 3, 2013, at the home of her daughter in Beltsville, Md. Mrs. O'Brien and her husband Jerry, who died in December 2011, lived in Greenbelt for over 60 years.

Mrs. O'Brien was born in 1922 in Washington, D.C. After graduating from St. Patrick's Catholic High School, she worked as a secretary for the War Department, the Red Cross, and the Catholic USO, where she met her future husband, a soldier home on leave from the European theater of operations of World War II. They were married in 1946 and lived in rental apartments in Washington, D.C., until 1951, when they heard that the government was selling charming and affordable Greenbelt Co-op housing. They rushed over and were happy to buy their first house, a frame unit on Southway.

Through the years they moved several times but never left Greenbelt. Like many women of her generation Mrs. O'Brien became a homemaker after her marriage. She and Jerry raised three children. They were members of St. Hugh of Grenoble Catholic Church.

Mrs. O'Brien lived for her faith, her family and her many friends.

She is survived by sons Joe and John O'Brien, her daughter and son-in-law Mary and Warren Winker, six grandchildren and five great grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be held on Saturday, April 6 at 11 a.m. at St. Hugh of Grenoble Catholic Church.

Register for Senior, Disabled Legal Clinic

On Monday, April 1 registration begins for this year's free legal clinic for seniors and the disabled, which will be held at the Community Center, 15 Crescent Road, on Wednesday, May 1.

The Maryland State Bar Association Elder Law Section Council, Prince George's County Advisory Committee on Aging, Department of Family Services and the City of Greenbelt Assistance in Living (GAIL) program are co-sponsoring the free legal clinic. Advice provided will assist participants in preparing Maryland Advance Directives to establish a health care agent, living will and optional after-death wishes.

Pre-registration is required by calling Greenbelt CARES/GAIL at 301-345-6660. Early registration is recommended as spots filled quickly last year.

Mishkan Torah Annual Jewelry Sale April 7

Sunday, April 7 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. is the date for this year's tenth annual Mishkan Torah Jewelry Sale. The sale features a large selection of costume and vintage recycled jewelry at reasonable prices (see ad on page 3).

The sale began with a Mishkan Torah member who worked in a scientific research lab as a technician with a woman who was single, had outlived all her relatives and had collected costume jewelry for decades. On her death, she willed all her jewelry to the Mishkan Torah member, who was to keep what she wanted and donate the rest to the Mishkan Torah Congregation to use as a fundraiser.

Over the years members and friends of Mishkan Torah donated antique and used costume jewelry for the following years' sales so that it became an ongoing, once-a-year affair. Scheduling it in advance of Mother's Day gives children a good opportunity to find gifts as well as for adults to find gifts for themselves or others. All are invited to come, look and have fun.

Our Neighbors

Greenbelt friends and neighbors were saddened to learn of the sudden death of retired teacher Tom Murphy on Friday, March 8, 2013. A memorial service and visitation will be held at Gasch's Funeral Home on Saturday, April 20 from 2 to 6 p.m.

Condolences to the friends and family of Greenbelt pioneer Carl Gussio of Baltimore, who died March 19, 2013. He graduated from Greenbelt High School in 1948 and was a member of the group of GHS friends who meet bimonthly for breakfast at American Legion Post 136. Special sympathy to his sisters Ellen Domchick of Wheaton and Betty May Shifflett of Riderwood.

Send us your reports of new babies, awards, honors, etc. to share with our readers. We'd especially like to hear more from our neighbors in Greenbelt East and Greenbelt West (Franklin Park). New Owner For South Core

On March 18 NVR, a Northern Virginia-based home developer, purchased the Greenbelt Station South Core development from its current owner, a realty arm of SunTrust Bank. The purchase price for the property was $26.6 Million for the 87-acre mixed-use parcel. The site, just south of the Greenbelt Metro Station, already has preliminary planning approvals and, with the sale, the planning process for the development should pick up where it left off several years ago.

Once development resumes the project will include three phases of townhouses, apartments and condominiums and retail space. Greenbelt's planning staff participated in informational meetings leading up to the property purchase and all of the city's conditions that were made part of the Development Agreement when the preliminary plan was approved six years ago remain intact.

acquainted with the patrons and their reading tastes as positive experiences.

During her tenure, Utley has frequented events in the community which culminated into an invitation to join the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum Board of Directors, where she served from 2001-2003.

Early Positions

Prior to coming to Greenbelt, the Philadelphia native worked in several capacities from branch manager, young adult (YA) collections librarian, YA supervisor to adult services librarian at the Fairmount Heights, Glenarden, New Carrollton and Hillcrest Heights libraries.

At the Fairmount Heights Branch, Utley launched in 1985 a Black Pursuits quiz for black history month based on Trivial Pursuit. Other than the name and topic change, a difference in the game was the participation of librarians and friends of the library in developing the questions and referencing library books on the answer cards.

Two years later the black history game became It's Academic. Each young adult librarian would canvas the neighborhood for county public and private schools to compete against one another at the branch level. The winning school at the county level won a trophy.

Utley said the competitions spanned 15 years and garnered media coverage, including the Washington Post and a newspaper in France.

As the young-adult librarian at that branch, Utley also read books from the collection and visited junior high schools to give book talks, thus bringing a specialized service to young readers. That is one of the elements of her job she found exciting, she said.

"The library is a community agency responding to the community's needs," said the Howard University graduate. "Libraries give people an even chance on what they can become."

Sunday Supervisor

At the New Carrollton Library, Utley said she was the first to provide services during the summer as a Sunday supervisor and took charge of the temporary volunteer program. It was also there that Utley joined forces with the city's recreation council and the Garden Club that made floral displays for the volunteer recognition program. Such community work, she said, led to the birth of Hillcrest Heights' Friends of the Library and the Mother-Daughter Book Club in Temple Hills years later.

Another aspect of the profession Utley has enjoyed has been exploring many mysteries.

"Being a librarian is like being a detective. I find it fascinating," she said, stating that patrons often don't exactly know what they are looking for when they come into the library. As a result, she has to ask open-ended questions, she said, gathering clues that grow into leads for resources. Utley said she has often received positive feedback on the help she has been able to render patrons.

"Giving good customer service is the highest priority next to their getting the information they came in for."

Members of the community who would like to thank Utley for her years of bountiful sowing are invited to her retirement party on Thursday, April 11 at the Greenbelt City Municipal Building from 6 to 9 p.m. Those planning to attend are asked to RSVP at elizabeth.wilkins@pgc-mls.info. In the meantime, patrons may donate photographs or write comments in Utley's memory scrapbook at the library.

Café's Poetry Night Patrons Celebrate 2nd Anniversary

by Jim Link

A wonderfully upbeat crowd of 40 descended on the New Deal Café to "sing the Siren song of poetry, to feel its necessary caress," Tuesday, March 19. This raucous, reverent, bawdy band celebrated the second anniversary of the Café's open microphone poetry night, held from 7 to 9 p.m. every third Tuesday of the month.

There's so much love and gratitude to spread around but I can offer only a fraction here.

That precious gem Amethyst energized the crowd with her boffo performance of Steve Trombulak's "Bardic Circle Rap."

"I'm thinkin' 'bout poetry friend, words that bring you alive Shine a light, hold a mirror, cut to the bones with a knife.

You gotta bring it (bring it), bring everything you got

You gotta bring it (bring it), cool as ice or smokin' hot."

Shirley wittily complained of the increasingly draconian abuse of our fragile ecosystem: "Arrest the wind! Arraign the rain! Impeach the peach! Cross examine the snowflake! Beat up the night 'cause it's black!

Let the millipedes be drawn and thousanded!"

Daniel serenaded his lady love in his "Engagement Poem", claiming that "I grow weak . . ."

Pam wondered "where are the women Kerouacs? Do only men travel and quest . . . ?"

The Most Excellent Master of Ceremonies David revealed to us the mysteries of "My Underwear" and proudly announced that his poet son Devin has just won a $50,000 college scholarship.

Rocky courageously gave voice to the downtrodden, the exiled, the marginalized, the unjustly scorned, victims burdened with bad press, in his "Letter to St. Patrick From a Snake." "Why the hate, Patrick? Try to see our beauty, see our wisdom."

Randi mourned the death of her daughter; John paid erotic homage to Susie's navel ring; Janet mused that a poem need not be heroic but simply a solid worker; Charles touched us with "Galileo Seeing the Soul"; Julie tenderly bickered with her son in "The Last Word." There was much else by many worthy others but it was Greek to me.

Let Timothy have the last word: "Poetry has the singular power to instruct, elevate, console, move and civilize . . . it can help us relish the beauty of the world, appreciate its sanctity, fight against its evils and bear its vicissitudes and sorrows."

The next poetry open microphone session is on Tuesday, April 16.

Emergency Preparedness

"Readiness" First Aid Kits Are Essential Emergency Supplies

by Kenneth Silberman

Knowing how to treat minor injuries can make a difference in an emergency. Greenbelt CERT (Community Emergency Response Team) recommends everyone take a first aid class, although having a kit can provide means to stop bleeding, prevent infection and assist in decontamination.

A first aid kit should have two pairs of nitrile gloves (not latex for those allergic to it), sterile gloves and dressings to stop bleeding, cleansing agent/soap and antibiotic towelettes. It should also contain antibiotic ointment, burn ointment, adhesive bandages in a variety of sizes, eye wash solution to flush the eyes or as a general decontaminant and a thermometer. First aid supplies include scissors, tweezers and a tube of petroleum jelly or other lubricant.

A home readiness kit should also include everyday prescription medications such as insulin, heart medicine and asthma inhalers. Some recommendations also include nonprescription drugs such as aspirin or non-aspirin pain reliever, anti-diarrhea medication, an antacid and a laxative.

Such medications should be periodically rotated to take expiration dates into account. Also included should be any other prescribed medical supplies such as glucose and blood pressure monitoring equipment.

Be ready for an emergency or injury to a family member and put a first aid kit together now.

Details about Greenbelt CERT are available at <http://www.tinyurl.com/greenbeltcer>.

Growing up in east Tennessee, I remember the glass-plate photograph of Mattie in our living room that showed dark hair piled luxuriously on her head, eyes that appeared to be blue and the hint of a smile. She was young and lovely, with a creamy complexion. She was always young because she died at 30 of an abortion in 1908 in New York City.

Of course, that's not the story my grandmother Elsie told. She said her mother had died in childbirth and that her father had to travel for work, so he put Elsie and her siblings in a fine boarding school on Long Island. In fact, Arthur fled and was not heard of for years and the "fine boarding school" was an orphanage so oppressive that the young inmates were allowed only one piece of candy each week.

I believe that my grandmother was trying to protect her children from the painful reality of how her mother died and the family collapse. Although she kept the truth from her three children, she had told my uncle's wife and swore her to secrecy. Elsie didn't want the secret found but she didn't want it lost either.

Mattie's four children – Myrtle, the oldest, followed by Elsie, Ethel and little Elliott, who was three when his mother died – had divergent destinies. After losing their mother and father, they gradually lost each other. At seven, Elliott – whom Elsie adored – was plucked out of the orphanage and sent south on the "Orphan Train." She never heard of him again despite repeated searches through the years and hiring a lawyer to assist. (Of course she never told us that either; we learned it after her death.)

Ethel married, had a baby, and died in the 1918 flu epidemic in New York, leaving a six-month old daughter. Myrtle and Elsie fled the orphanage in their teens to work in Manhattan as clerks and secretaries. Myrtle never married. Elsie met my grandfather at the USO where she danced the Charleston and fell for the dapper young WWI naval officer. They moved to South Carolina, his home, and had three children.

Elliott and Elsie tried to find each other for 80 years and never succeeded. She died in 1988 and he died a few years later. His daughter tracked down my cousin, and ultimately we had a family reunion where she gave us a priceless memento: an uncut two-hour PBS interview with Elliott, who had been the major figure in an hour-long program on the Orphan Trains.

Mom and the Bomb

My mother, Geraldine, was Elsie's oldest child and proved to be a talented athlete (tennis and basketball) and musician (piano). She graduated from Furman University in 1942 and decided to apply to the WAVES despite her father's protests that women didn't belong in the Navy. She was one of only two women selected from South Carolina that year and a large photo showing her in a print dress with a purse appeared on the sports page of the Columbia paper headlined "Athlete Chosen as Midshipman." The U.S. Navy was the last branch of the military to admit women and Eleanor Roosevelt prevailed upon Franklin to give WAVES full military benefits, the only WWII women to achieve that status. After training at Smith College, Jerry was assigned as a communications officer at Charleston Navy Yard, then received coveted orders to Hunter's Point Base in San Francisco. She carried messages and a pistol to walk at night through the Embarcadero to the military logistics center on the wharf and civilian men whistled and yelled, "Hey, Pistol-Packin' Mama!"

In the summer of 1945, shortly after she was promoted to senior lieutenant, Jerry reported to work for her 4 p.m.-to-midnight shift and was handed a top-secret message. Very few were sent during the war and protocol demanded that she deliver it to the commander of the base. He berated her for being too young for the mission and demanded that she state the full protocol for handling the message. She complied and replied correctly, burning the message in his presence.

When she went back to her "cage" in her building, a 15-foot crate on a platform, had been moved into a room two doors down, guarded by an Army general and Navy admiral, guns at their sides. She and her Marine guard were the only personnel in the building. The crate held the main components of the Little Boy bomb destined for Hiroshima and the message said the crate was to be loaded onto the Indianapolis, flagship of the Fifth Fleet, at 0400 hours.

Mom had an hour for dinner later that night and met up with a South Carolina friend assigned to the Indianapolis and a WAVE friend who knew him. He was frightened and told them he was never coming back; his hands shook so badly that he spilled his coffee on his uniform. He was right – after delivering the deadly cargo to Tinian where it was loaded on the Enola Gay, the Indianapolis was torpedoed and sank and hundreds of men floated in the oily debris and were eaten by sharks, including him. The ship was traveling under deep cover so no one knew it had gone down. It was the worst disaster in the history of the U.S. Navy.

Coal Mining Women

Mom kept quiet about her military experiences and didn't tell me her story or show me her uniform until I was in high school. Dad had also been in the Navy and they had an unusually egalitarian marriage except for one thing – Dad didn't want Mom to work.

I was raised with the expectation that I'd go to college but without any clear career direction or mentoring. Mom didn't raise me to get married and have children but she was less than pleased when I moved to the coalfields after graduation and decided to get a job as a coal miner. When she complained to her friends from South Carolina, they said, "Jerry, she's just like you!" and said they couldn't believe she had wanted to join the war.

The coalfields changed my worldview and my life path. After leaving the mines when my dad died, I began interviewing women coal miners for a book and eventually came to Washington, D.C. to work for the United Mine Workers of America.

Although Mom was upset at my choices, I credit her for teaching me that I could do anything I set my mind to.

Women's issues continue to evolve. Military women will be going into combat. The abortion issue continues to trigger heated debate. And this summer, former women coal miners will gather for our first reunion in 20 years to celebrate the international organizing that took place.

With our generation getting older, young women will write the next chapter of what it means to be female in America.

Utopia Film Festival 2013 Seeks Volunteers

by Susan Gervasi

Utopia Film Festival 2013 planners will hold their first meeting on Saturday, March 30 at 1 p.m., at Greenbelt Access Television (GATE), Room 204 of the Community Center. Movie-lovers who would like to be part of this annual October event are invited to attend.

"Volunteering with Utopia allows you to see amazing films that might never be available in theaters or through online film distributors," said Justin Baker, Utopia associate director. "The Festival is a Greenbelt cultural gem."

In its ninth year, Utopia is an all-volunteer effort supported by nonprofit Greenbelt Access Television, the City of Greenbelt, the Maryland Film Office and other sponsors. The Festival takes its name from Greenbelt's "utopian" origins in the New Deal and views its mission as "seeking a better world through film."

Volunteers for Utopia 2013 are needed to suggest independent films for possible inclusion, screen and evaluate filmmaker submissions, assist with publicity, supply technical support, find sponsors and to meet and greet independent filmmakers who annually attend.

"We showcase works from local and international filmmakers," said Connie Davis, manager of Festival volunteers. "We give them a voice."

Artist and filmmaker Alan Haley, nephew of "Roots" author Alex Haley and Utopia's manager of film screenings and technical operations, believes movies and works of animation help bring meaning to the world.

"Come and be part of Utopia," he said.

For more information about the March 30 planning meeting, volunteering for Utopia or submitting a work to the Festival, call 301-466-9524 or email utopiafilmfestival2013@gmail.com. Continuing updates will also be available on the Utopia website at utopiafilmfestival.org.

Susan Gervasi is executive director of Utopia Film Festival 2013.

Women's Studies Builds Friendships that Endure

by Virginia Beauchamp

How many years have we known one another? Forty at least – long before Anne Mills King moved to Greenbelt. She remembers we met during the early days of what is called Women's Studies at the University of Maryland. The program began unofficially in the spring semester 1974, one of about four such programs then nationwide. I was its first coordinator.

King soon originated a similar program at the Prince George's Community College. And since then, newly retired after some 38 years at the college, she bought a GHI home on Gardenway and happily settled in. Many Greenbelters have now come to know her as a teacher of Community College classes for seniors at the Greenbelt Community Center.

What neither of us had known until this week was how similar, however, had been the trajectories of our two lives. Both of us served overseas in World War II – she in Italy and North Africa, I in the Philippines and Japan. Both had followed husbands to Foreign Service positions abroad, arranging for our children's schooling in distant places – for her in Spain, in Nigeria for me.

Both of us also have taught in ESOL programs (English for Speakers of Other Languages). I taught at the University of Michigan where the program began in the 1940s; she taught in Spain. Her students there were Cubans who had fled their homes, leaving behind their cars with keys still in the ignition, abandoned at the airport. Only in this way could they safely depart the Castro regime.

Both of us also had earned PhDs – mine at the University of Chicago in the 1950s, hers two decades later at Maryland.

Life in Greenbelt

So what does she like about this town? "All kinds of wonderful programs," she says. "And people of all ages. I love Greenbelt," King adds. It's a pleasure, she says, to be able to walk to the Center and to see all the different generations "hanging out."

And then there are all "the wonderful programs" and convenient businesses – like doctors and dentists nearby and the New Deal Café and other local restaurants.

And so many programs, like plays at the Arts Center or movies at the Old Greenbelt Theatre.

"And people are friendly," she adds. King enjoys the library and has joined the Greenbelt Post of the American Legion. She is eligible, of course, with her history in World War II.

And then there's her old dog to keep her company and the nearby playground for children. That's one thing she especially loves, she says as she and I say goodbye – "to watch the kids going by each day."

Just as I walk to the car, a high school student I know so well then wanders by. I look up to see Krissy, my own granddaughter, snugly tucked into her jacket on such a chilly, chilly day on her way to the Center with
