Miss Greenbelt 2014 Raised $2,014 For Adoptions Group

by Edith Beauchamp

During her year as Miss Greenbelt, Kristin Beauchamp, my daughter, had raised almost $2,000 by Labor Day 2015 for her chosen charity, when she was set to crown the new Miss Greenbelt for 2015. Amber Youhouse, a co-director of the Miss Greenbelt Scholarship organization, stepped up to the microphone to tell the audience at the Greenbelt American Legion about Kristen's efforts all year to raise money for Adoptions Together, an organization that helps foster children find permanent adoptive homes.

Kristen organized several bake sales held at the Greenbelt Co-op Grocery; produced and performed at a music concert she organized with other talented teens she recruited from Eleanor Roosevelt High School; hosted another fundraiser at Franklin's Restaurant which contributed 20 percent of patrons' purchases; and created a GoFundMe website that also encouraged other contributions via social media, among other fundraising during her year representing the city as the 60th Miss Greenbelt.

Youhouse formally introduced Kristen for the final crowning ceremony of her successor Alisha Karley, as Miss Greenbelt 2015. She playfully added, "Kristen has raised $1,970 so far, so if someone wants to contribute the last $30, see Kristen at the end." Kristen gave an impassioned tearful speech herself of what the year had meant to her and the learning opportunities that participating with the Miss Greenbelt organization had afforded her. In particular she spoke from the heart about the important work of Adoptions Together.

As Kristen ended her speech, Devin Fendley handed her another $30 in cash that had been donated for her charity by John Winfrey, who was in the audience. Just after Labor Day, several additional friends and family contributed a few more dollars to bring the final to $2,014 to match Kristen's official year of 2014 as Miss Greenbelt.

Wall of Fame Now Honors Del. Barnes Work with Youth

by Hannah Klarner

Delegate Darryl Barnes was inducted into the Beltway Plaza Wall of Fame Thursday night, joining religious leaders, community members, politicians, police officers and others who were recognized for their efforts to affect positive change in Prince George's County.

Roughly 60 people gathered to watch the induction ceremony in the west entrance of the Mall.

Barnes was chosen as the newest member of the Wall of Fame for his ongoing work with Men Aiming Higher, a non-profit organization that benefits young men in Prince George's County, and his work as the representative for the 25th District (Annapolis) in the House of Delegates.

Marc "Kap" Kapastin, creator of the Wall of Fame, opened the program with a brief speech about Barnes' work in the community.

Prince George's County State's Attorney Angela Alsobrooks, Bob Ross, president of the Prince George's County NAACP, and Senator Ulysses Currie gave brief speeches highlighting Barnes' commitment to positive change in the county and his personal dedication.

American Education Week November 16 to 20

In celebration of American education, these columns will be telling the stories of selected teachers from the schools that serve the Greenbelt community. This week readers will get a glimpse inside Magnolia Elementary School. In coming weeks we will focus on the other local public schools.

The stories feature two teachers or staff members at each school, and are coordinated by David Lange, who originated the series and liaises with the schools, and Alice Murray who works with the reporters.

Area Schools to Celebrate American Education Week

Kirstyn A. Flood

It's American Education Week this week and neighborhood schools are paying attention.

"The importance of American Education Week is to build morale between staff, parents and students. It also shows the educators how deeply appreciated they are for all their hard work," said Kristin Cahalan-Hudson, Greenbelt Elementary School (GES) counselor.

GES and Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) are celebrating American education by honoring teachers, the Parent Teacher Association (PTA) and support staff through various activities.

Erika Brett, curriculum coordinator at ERHS, said each day the staff receives a token of appreciation. Friday is Substitute Appreciation Day, when substitute teachers will receive goodie bags.

During the week, students at GES dressed up for each of the special days: Monday was Your Future is Bright, Tuesday was Step in the Right Direction, Wednesday was College Bound and Parent Visitation Day, Thursday was Class Color Day and Friday is School Spirit Day.

Cahalan-Hudson said the themes "build a class bond and foster open discussion of the students' future aspirations." She also noted how fantastic the PTA is at GES, providing the teachers and staff with goodies and support on a monthly basis. "It truly makes all year feel like a celebration of the hard work that is going on in our school," she said.

Leslie Tapscott-Mull Asks Magnolia Students to Excel

by Jacob Taylor

Leslie Tapscott-Mull remembers the exact day she started teaching: January 7, 2000. Her first position was at Owens Road Elementary School in Oxon Hill. She eventually moved to Matthew Henson Elementary in Landover, where she taught until the school closed in 2010. She has been teaching at Magnolia Elementary School since 2011. Tapscott-Mull was born in Washington D.C. and raised in Forestville, in Prince George's County.

She got her undergraduate degree in elementary education and psychology from Salisbury University and a master's degree in reading instruction from Bowie State University.

She is married to Timothy Mull and has three children, Naomi, Noah and Noelle.

Tapscott-Mull is the Magnolia reading specialist. She helps teachers plan their lessons and find materials that meet the needs of their curriculum. She also works with small groups of students who are either struggling in the classroom or excelling such that they need additional instruction.

Some of these kids are "students that we've just kind of noticed need that extra support. They're successful in the classroom when they have that extra support and then when they have it taken away, they struggle a little bit more," she said.

She is currently working to introduce new phonics instruction through a grant proposal she submitted last year to the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Education (ACE). She also teaches a reading incentive program, a reading club funded by ACE for students with exceptional reading skills.

She has something of a musical talent as well. Julie Huften, a teacher of English for speakers of other languages at Magnolia, said that Tapscott-Mull is "our marketing campaigner— if we need a jingle, she'll make the lyrics."

A Particular Problem

Micro-gaffe or legal blunder, I couldn't say – but editorially this seems a doozy!

In recounting the swearing in of the new Greenbelt City Council (ok, really the same old council), the News Review's Jim Giese offered readers some rich detail:

"...some members still had difficulty in repeating the words [from their oath of office, which] former Mayor Jordan administered. With their informal remarks picked up on open microphones, one commented that councilmembers should really memorize the oath in advance. Another complained about the difficulty in reciting the word particularity (administer the office without particularity or prejudice) and felt that it should be two words."

I'll venture a strong guess why all our councilmembers might intuitively have had trouble executing that word – a reason not offered in the article. No, "particularity" is not the most common word. Nor is particularity present in the formal oath of office required of Greenbelt's elected officials – or any other elected official in Maryland.

The particular word that actually does appear in the official oath at that precise spot is partiality, as in without partiality or prejudice.

The relevant verbiage in the Greenbelt Charter comes entirely – not partially, nor impartially – from the Maryland Constitution.

Of this small fact, I am certain: detailed as they are, "particularity" just ain't in either document.

So how, pray tell, can Greenbelt's council execute the office if they failed to execute the oath itself? I don't mean they failed to live up to their oath; I mean they failed to take their oath as dictated by Charter and mandated by Constitution.

How Come?

So how, in our Utopian burg, did our much-liked and normally sharp mayor lead all six other councilmembers into verbally reciting an erroneous oath? To be fair, he wasn't being precisely oathish. Honestly, he just made a mistake. I've certainly misspoken worse. Surely, such a gaffe could befall anyone.

But how could everyone apparently miss it? How could two Greenbelt city managers (one past, one current, both present, together possessing well over a half-century of municipal experience), the city's lawyer and such an august gaggle of incumbents and civic aficionados fail to note such a failure of rote. My back-of-the-envelope tally suggests the incumbents had, collectively, recited the correct oath before no less than 50 times! And yet, when prompted, all parroted with particularity the words proffered, as is. Was there no prim parliamentarian present?

How could the journalist covering it even quip in print about the mis-articulation of the word and not note it was the wrong one?

But how consequential a glitch this might prove remains to be seen, since Greenbelt's council has in its entirety after all, on

Crossing the Atlantic for Brooklyn

Opening at Old Greenbelt Theatre on Wednesday, November 25 is Brooklyn, a highly praised adaptation of Colm Toibin's well-received novel set in the last century. Young Eilis Lacey (the plangent Saoirse Ronan), pulled this way and that in her small Irish town, finally crosses the Atlantic in steerage to take on a new life. Shy, feeling her way gingerly, living in a boarding house, she studies to become a bookkeeper and meets Tony (Emory Cohen), a would-be suitor. On a visit home, confronting family history and local pressures, Eilis must weigh the criss-crossing elements she's up against and decide in which direction she should go. Ronan plays her role superbly, clearly benefiting, as does the overall film, from the talents of screenwriter Nick Hornby and director John Crowley.

In Memoriam: Vasilios Psaromatis

Vasilios P. Psaromatis, age 13, died from complications of brain cancer in the Gilchrist Hospice in Towson early Tuesday, November 3. He was the son of Lisa Meetre Psaromatis, who grew up in Greenbelt, and her husband, Panagiotis. Vasili is also survived by his five younger siblings, Ricky, Michael, Jeffrey, Margaret and Catherine. Maternal grandparents Rick and Cathie Meetre are long-time Greenbelters and Aunts Sarah Liska and Jenny Meetre grew up here and attended Greenbelt schools.

Vasili died from Gliomatosis Cerebri, a rare brain cancer. He was first diagnosed in August 2014 when one of his eyes tracked off center. The pediatric ophthalmologist was immediately concerned enough to send him for an MRI. Within a day there was a virtually certain diagnosis, confirmed later by the pathology report. This disease tends to affect children more than adults, boys and girls equally, and is universally fatal – often within a few months. It is usually diagnosed from the cancer pressing on the optic nerve (like Vasili) or from a seizure. There are approximately 100 new cases a year in the U.S. making it very rare compared to other childhood cancers and resulting in minimal research.

Vasili's disease followed a fairly predictable path. He had surgery to relieve the pressure on his optic nerve and this left him with some deficits of sight and balance. For some months he was able to lead a fairly active life, but his sight was steadily worsening and he was getting less coordinated and weaker. He also suffered from seizures that could beset him at any time. The pediatric hospice took him as a home-based patient during the fall of 2014 and the hospice nurses visited weekly and provided resources. He really enjoyed their visits – and they also provided him with counseling and the opportunity to talk about how he felt and what he wanted to say to others about his situation. He understood his predicament from the start and was unfailingly positive and uncomplaining about it.

In September 2014, his father, Panagiotis, took Vasili to Mount Athos and to the family's traditional home in Elafonisos, both in Greece. The extended family had a gala weekend at Massanutten and he got to ride in a fabulous vintage Mustang. Vasili enjoyed the attention and the treats immensely. In January this year, the Make a Wish Foundation sent him and his family on a cruise to Cozumel from Florida, granting his wish to go to a warm beach with palm trees. He was especially excited to be picked up in a stretch limo. On the way back the family also stopped in Orlando. Vasili had a fabulous time with his cousins who also came along for the trip – enjoying the shipboard amusements and riding on dolphins. He even tackled the climbing wall.

Nothing, however, held back the illness. There is no chemotherapy that is effective and radiation is destructive and ineffective. Gliomatosis doesn't form a tumor that can be excised. It is more like a fibrous net that gradually works further into the brain, causing swelling and destruction of normal tissue. For Vasili, the inexorable progression continued. By Easter this year, he was bed-bound and blind. He became very slowly more disabled, began having more profound seizures and was taking steroids to diminish seizure symptoms and headaches resulting from swelling in the brain. The steroids made him constantly hungry and his favorite person was always the one who turned up with a treat. By mid-September it was a big effort to speak, but the bringer of a mocha cappuccino or Chipotle could rely on an enthusiastic "Yay!"

Vasili made sure, during this time while he could still speak, to make sure everybody knew he loved them.

Vasili's mother, Lisa, an intensive care RN, took care of all his personal nursing and needs, with some help with the household from friends and family. Her sisters Sarah and Jenny, who live nearby, were a primary and loving resource – creative in providing treats and sleepovers for the younger siblings and generous with their love and time to the whole family. Vasili's extensive Greek family provided care and support, brought food and was an unfailing source of cousin playmates and sleepovers. Neighbors and friends ran errands and provided transportation for siblings. An entire virtual village cared for Vasili.

Lisa was unfailingly patient, loving and competent – she called Vasili 'My Beautiful Boy' and no child ever received more patient and capable care. Panagiotis, his father, was deeply affected and never gave up researching potential treatments. As one of six children, Vasili was especially appreciative of his father's undivided attention during their one-on-one trip to Greece. Vasili was the ultimate trooper. He didn't complain or whine. He retained his sense of humor and warmth to the last and never forgot to thank his caregivers or tell them how much he appreciated them.

Vasili's breathing became increasingly uneven as October went on. Over time, his ability to swallow deteriorated and it got harder for him to take any sustenance. On November 2, his breathing became labored from pneumonia. He was transported to the hospice where he died peacefully early the next day with his mother and father enfolding him.

Greek Orthodox funeral services took place November 5.

We encourage Greenbelters to inform themselves about this devastating cancer which receives so little attention – see weillcornellbrainandspine.org. In Vasili's memory, a fund has been established for the church he loved and donations can be made through gofundme.com/7j9ewcfw

Barnes was the last to speak, focusing largely on the work that Men Aiming Higher has done since its founding in 2009. He highlighted the fact that his successes and the successes of Men Aiming Higher is a collaborative effort. "This is not just about Darryl Barnes," he said. "This is about everyone in this room."

Barnes asked all the men from Men Aiming Higher to stand before calling them up to present Senator Currie with an award thanking him for 24 years of public service in Prince George's County. He ended his speech by saying, "the best is yet to come."

The ceremony and Barnes' place in the Wall of Fame also comes with a $500 donation from the owners of Beltway Plaza Mall on behalf of Barnes to Men Aiming Higher.

The Wall of Fame showcases the photographs and biographies of members of the Prince George's County community who have contributed to positive change in the county.

The wall was Kapastin's idea after he saw something similar in the Philadelphia Convention Center. He said that he wanted the wall to be in a prominent place so that children could see people who made a positive impact on their community.

Barnes' induction was the eighth ceremony to take place since the wall was first created in 2013.

picnic. Kristen was invited to present the check with the money she raised to Founder and Executive Director Janice Goldwater in front of several hundred of the families who have been formed through this organization's efforts. Kristen described how important the organization's work was to her personally since she and her brother, Allen, were adopted from the foster care system, although in another state, but nevertheless, she wanted to reach out and find a way to give back to other children in need of a "forever family."

November is National Adoption Month to help bring awareness of the adoption process and the need for permanent homes and families for over 100,000 U.S. children every year who are legally orphaned and in the U.S. foster care system waiting for adoption. By contrast, the U.S. State Department reports the 15-year average of approximately 16,000 children adopted each year by U.S. families from all other foreign countries combined. Only half of U.S. children who are waiting for homes are actually adopted, and so building awareness of the foster care adoption process, legalized in 1997 with the Adoption and Safe Families Act, is the goal of National Adoption Month.

Those interested in learning more about how to adopt children should go to the Adoptions Together website adoptions.together.org.

video, failed to swear impartiality in office. Not to be too particular about it, but given the legalities impartial observers might think that more than partially problematic. Then again, other counsel to council might renounce that level of particularity.

Not being a jurist, it's hard for me to judge.

Andy Carruthers

(Editor's Note: a review of the meeting's live stream confirms that the particular word used was particularity.)

Gratitude

As a brand spanking new GHI member, I want to give a warm virtual embrace to all the GBers who have welcomed me into the hood! I especially want to thank Michael Hartman (whose PT is on a rampage against me) and Annie Shaw (who made sure I moved in with more than a spoon). A shout-out, as well, to the Greenbelt Time Bank, whose members made moving and hauling random pieces of furniture FUN. And, finally, a thank you to George Bachman, Director of Maintenance for GHI, who is resolving a major hiccup with grace and consideration.

Aileen Krull

THANKS

I would like to recognize and thank everyone who voted in the city council election. I especially thank those who supported me. I am honored to have your trust.

During the campaign, I appreciated meeting and talking with many citizens and hearing your thoughts and concerns. As a councilmember, I aim to do my best for all Greenbelt citizens. I promise to work hard, listen attentively, consider all issues thoughtfully and thoroughly and always act in the best interests of the city.

My campaign theme is Building on the Spirit of Greenbelt and Expanding the Possibilities. That spirit is the spirit of working together, the spirit of cooperation. Together council, citizens and staff work to make Greenbelt a better community and I am committed to doing my part.

Snarky Journalism

As a new resident of Greenbelt West, I was very proud to vote in my first local election. My husband and I did our research and felt we voted for the best candidates.

I anxiously read the election results in the Greenbelt News Review. However, I was disappointed with the description of Precinct 8 which begins: "As usual, Precinct 8 Greenbelt West, had the poorest turnout..."

That paragraph by Mr. Giese did not belong in a news article.

It should have been in an op-ed piece. It was snarky journalism at best and may speak more to a lack of authentic representation of Greenbelt West than it does to the electorate of Precinct 8.

We will be submitting articles to the Greenbelt News Review that reflect the vibrancy of Greenbelt West and challenge the perceptions reflected in your article.

Thankful

We are so thankful for our recreation department's offering of "Fit Club," an after school program that allows for free play and instructor-led games and activities. AJ, the course facilitator, is great with the kids. Our son enjoys the class immensely, saying "We get to play a lot."

Thank you!

American Education Week

Joseph Fernandez: Trials & Rewards of Teaching Abroad

by Jacob Taylor

The biggest struggle Tapscott-Mull sees as a teacher is when adults talk about how a child or group of children cannot succeed but without giving them the chance. "I think it gives children the idea that it's okay to give up, it's okay to stop, it's okay not to try," she said. "I struggle with it so much when I hear other people say it because I know that sometimes that reflects what I'm thinking too."

"Sometimes we as teachers are afraid to challenge our children because we don't want them to fail, but there is growth in failure," she went on to say. "I think that as educators one of the things we have to remind children of is that the most important thing to do is to try."

Tapscott-Mull says her most rewarding moment as a teacher happened this year. She was in a second grade class that was discussing elements of literature, specifically how when an author dedicates a book, it's typically to someone who had a significant impact in the author's life. "We asked students 'if you were writing your book, who would you dedicate your book to?'" Tapscott-Mull said, "One of the little boys in the class said he'd dedicate his book to me."

Tapscott-Mull had worked with the student before; he had been in her small reading group last year and had struggled with reading. She said, "He had really come a long way - he gained a lot of ability and confidence." She said it was great "just to see that our time together meant as much to him as it did to me."

Tapscott-Mull said she discovered that she wanted to be a teacher during a reading and writing workshop in high school. "Our teacher really challenged us to look at things from a different perspective to form a sound opinion, not just one that was loosely formed," she said. "Just that experience of learning and growing under that teacher really gave me the desire to teach and impact children as an instructor."

Tapscott-Mull is currently working towards getting certification from the National Board of Certified Teachers. The application process is long and complicated but she hopes it will be "the cherry on top. It means that you are a distinguished educator, that you have gone above and beyond the requirements for just state certification," she said.

Magnolia Elementary School educator Joseph Fernandez is a career teacher, currently rounding out his 27th year of teaching. He said, "I love teaching. I don't see teaching as a job, it's a ministry for me." He comes from a family of teachers. His father was a teacher who eventually became a police officer and his mother was a teacher who became a homemaker after having children. Both of his sisters grew up to become teachers. His wife, Leonor Fernandez, also teaches at Magnolia Elementary.

Fernandez was born and raised in the Philippines. He received his undergraduate degree from Cebu Normal University and then a master's degree in educational management from Southwestern University, both located in the Philippines.

In 2004, after watching many of his friends and colleagues pursue teaching abroad, Fernandez moved to the United States. His first job in the United States was in New York, teaching middle school math. Fernandez said that his first year in an American classroom was very difficult.

"Coming from a country with a very different culture, I had a hard time adjusting to the attitude and behavior of the students," he said, "I realized that I had the skills, I knew the content, but I was challenged with my students in terms of managing their behavior."

"You see, when you come from a country in which teachers are the ultimate bosses in the classroom, you exude so much authority in the classroom but that was not the case when I arrived in New York," he said. Fernandez said his appearance and ethnicity only made things harder, "During that first year I was the only Asian in that school," he added.

"During that first year, the students would ask me openly, 'why are you here, what are you doing?'" he said. "In Prince George's County, it's different."

Fernandez says his most rewarding moment as a teacher came while he was teaching in New York. "In New York, the competition from teacher to teacher is very tough. I was teaching math and there is this test, a city wide test, and I was so proud of myself, being a first year teacher when I was able to pull up the test scores for all of my students and my principal told me 'Mr. Fernandez, you have done a wonderful job.'"

Compared to New York, he said, the classroom culture in Prince George's County is far closer to what he was used to in the Philippines, "Here in PG County it's like heaven for me, I really love it

Fernandez began working in Prince George's County at Bradbury Heights Elementary School in 2006. In 2011, problems with his visa forced him to move to the District of Columbia. In 2013, he was able to return to county and he began teaching fifth grade math at Magnolia Elementary.

While Fernandez still does some direct teaching, his primary role is now as an instructional lead. He describes his job as "building the skills of not only the students but also of the teachers." He helps other teachers refine their lesson plans. He checks to make sure that the objectives in the lesson plan match those of the class. He examines the tests that are used in the class to make sure they accurately measure the students' abilities.

Fernandez's main focus is on math and the mathematics curriculum but he is technically responsible for examining the lesson plans across all grades and all subjects.

He coordinates extensively with Leslie Tapscott-Mull, another American Education Week honoree, on reading and literacy-related curricula.

A big focus for Fernandez is incorporating skills used in math into other subjects. He said, "We want to consider infusing the concept of relationships in the other subject areas. For example, if they're working on identifying the characters in a story, I want them to focus on comparing the relationships between them."

Schatz plays music that is steeped in tradition yet completely original; his songs give words to life's hard-to-describe moments. In addition to performing original music with his own band, Schatz has several weekly gigs playing classic

Volunteer Workers Clean Up Indian Creek Stream Banks

by Erin Josephitis

Volunteers gather for the America Recycles Day Stream Bank Cleanup at Indian Creek.

On Saturday, November 14, in honor of America Recycles Day a group of 30 volunteers led by two city staff gathered to clean the banks of Indian Creek. In only 1.5 hours a total of 300 pounds of recyclables and litter were collected and removed.

The most frequently collected item was plastic water bottles, which were separated from litter and recycled. Among the other items removed were two shopping carts, a traffic cone and a tire. Volunteers play a key role in protecting and restoring Indian Creek and the Chesapeake Bay Watershed.

The event was made possible by the City of Greenbelt Public Works Department partnering with CHEARS, America Recycles Day, American Rivers and Alice Ferguson Foundation. Thanks to Starbucks for donating hot coffee.

For anyone looking for another volunteer opportunity, consider signing up for the Zero Waste Tree Lighting Ceremony on Friday, December 4 from 6 to 9 p.m. Save the environment by collecting biodegradable cups and napkins while listening to music, eating cookies and sipping hot chocolate. RSVP to erjosephitis@greenbeltmd.gov to confirm availability. Space is limited.

Community Foundation Gets Vital New Partner

The Greenbelt Community Foundation is celebrating its 10th anniversary in 2016 with a campaign titled Explore Your Greenbelt. The campaign will consist of a series of free events and activities highlighting the impact of the Foundation on the community since its founding in 2006.

Paradyne Management is partnering with the Greenbelt Community Foundation to help promote Explore Your Greenbelt. In 2011, Paradyne Management moved its corporate offices to Greenbelt and now serves as a premier provider of area information technology systems and integration services.

"Paradyne Management is honored and excited to partner with an organization that has had such a positive impact on the Greenbelt community, says Paradyne founder and CEO Viraj

Gandhi. "We look forward to helping Explore Your Greenbelt be a success."

"We are thrilled that Paradyne has chosen to commit to serving all the neighborhoods of Greenbelt by becoming a vital partner in the Foundation's 10th anniversary campaign," said Foundation Chair Melissa Ehrenreich. "With their expertise and partnership, we will help Greenbelt citizens rediscover our city's treasures through the stories and programs of our incredible grantees."

The Greenbelt Community Foundation has given grants to local nonprofit organizations and cooperatives that provide important services to the area, funding organizations such as the Greenbelt Farmers Market, Springhill Elementary School, Greenbelt Makerspace, Friends of Still Creek and alight dance theater.

American Legion Post #136 conducted its annual Veterans Day ceremonies at the Greenbelt War Memorial on November 11. Greenbelt citizens and members of the Greenbelt police and fire departments joined town council and American Legion representatives honoring America's veterans. The ceremony included comments by Mayor Emmett Jordan and Commander Mike Moore, a rifle volley salute and echoing taps. Activities included a special treat for children as Post #136 coordinated with Dr. Caitlin McGrath, who showed two films starring "Peanuts" characters in the historic Greenbelt theater that informed children about American history. Post representatives distributed to children and adults American flags and booklets about the origins of the American flag and why we honor veterans.

Historic Theater Cites Successful Rebirth

At the Old Greenbelt Theatre's recent Member and Community Appreciation event, Executive Director Caitlin McGrath served up good news and encouraging statistics along with snacks and short films. Generous supporters numbering 655 have joined the Old Greenbelt Theatre as Friends of the Greenbelt Theatre. Thanks to their generosity and good ticket sales the theater has finished its first six months in the black. In the last three months, movies have attracted 6,235 viewers to over 255 screenings. Favorite films have been Rosenwald, Grandma and Meet the Patels. There were 1,718 sales of fresh popcorn, boosting enjoyment and revenues. The theater has hosted 10 family programming events, 26 community outreach events and two film festivals. Remodeled in 2014-2015 by the City of Greenbelt, the theater retains its original design and historic single screen. It seats 380 and has up-to-date projectors and sound system.

Students Learn and Help Build A Healthier Local Watershed

by Kyla Hanington

Clara Holland can see aliens. The Greenbelt seventh-grader has been learning to identify local native and non-native plant species and how they impact vital waters. A Saturday camp hosted by the Anacostia Watershed Society provides opportunities for local seventh and eighth graders to explore the river system and learn how to help improve its health. The Saturday Environmental Academy (SEA), a free 10-week program for students from within the Anacostia Watershed, has young people like Holland spending their Saturday mornings touring green roofs and helping plant rain gardens.

The river is famously polluted. Raw sewage from outdated sewer systems and storm water flood into the river each year along with some 20,000 tons of garbage and debris. "The Anacostia River used to be 40 feet deep," said Holland. Due to farming and stormwater run-off from pavement, "now it's only about three and a half feet deep."

SEA Program Director Catherine Estes confirms that the river is roughly 3.5 to 4.5 feet deep now due to stormwater pollution.

In recent weeks the SEA students have visited Sidwell Friends Middle School in D.C. to tour their constructed wetlands and green roof, helped plant a rain garden at First United Methodist Church in Hyattsville, helped prepare the Marion Street Intergenerational Community Garden for winter and worked along the Northeast Branch of the Anacostia River to add native plants and remove mudwort, a non-native species. Upcoming adventures include an overnight trip to Hard Bargain Farm in Accokeek and touring the Nationals baseball stadium.

Holland is hopeful about restoring health to the Anacostia. "Use rain barrels," she suggested to Greenbelt residents. Rain barrels stop some of the damaging flow of storm water carrying soil, fertilizer, oil and other pollutants that would otherwise cascade into Indian Creek, which flows into the Anacostia, which in turn flows into the Potomac and from there into the Chesapeake Bay.

The SEA runs two sessions each year, one from March to May and the other from October to December. Students in seventh and eighth grade who live anywhere within the Anacostia Watershed can apply to attend. For further information, contact Catherine Estes at cestes@anacostiaws.org.
