ERHS Students Talk Policy With State and Local Leaders

by Melissa Sites

High school juniors and seniors active in student government had the opportunity to experience the making of government policy in action in a table talk meeting with State Delegate Alonzo Washington held at Eleanor Roosevelt High School last week. Around 30 people attended, including social studies teacher Brian Secker, Principal Reginald McNeill and Lupi Quinteros-Grady, the local representative to the Prince George's County Board of Education. Washington spoke directly with students about how he thought government should act to improve education for Maryland students.

Washington told students about the Kirwan Commission, also called the Commission on Innovation and Educational Excellence. This group (led by William E. "Britt" Kirwan, chancellor emeritus of the University System of Maryland) was assembled to ensure equitable distribution of funds for education around Maryland.

Goals and Ramblings

Joe Francaviglia, director of partnerships at StrongSchoolsMaryland.org, helped present the five key Kirwan Commission goals: universal early childhood education, including pre-K; adequate compensation

Iconic Greenbelt Sculptures Slated for Restoration in 2019

by Matthew Arbach

Plans are underway to restore two iconic Greenbelt sculptures, the Preamble to the United States Constitution on the Community Center and the Mother and Child statue in Roosevelt Center.

Both were sculpted by Lenore Thomas Straus while in her 20s, and both date back to the early days of the city, erected in 1937 and 1939, respectively. For both works of art, the aim of the restoration is to reduce stains caused by airborne pollutants and biological growth and to enhance the sculpture's structural integrity. This treatment was done previously, in 1999 and 2007. Said Greenbelt Museum Director

Funds for this project were provided jointly by the Maryland Heritage Area Authority, which granted $29,500, and matching funds from the City of Greenbelt. The grants were jointly developed by the Department of Planning and Community Development and the Greenbelt Recreation Arts Program. In addition to the treatment to the artwork, the windows above the Preamble will be repainted to prevent further rust stains.

Arts Supervisor Nicole DeWald forecasts that the work will likely begin in the spring, since restorers will need good weather. Steps forward include receiving permission for the project from the Maryland Historical Trust, an agency of the Maryland Department of Planning. Also, the city council and city manager will choose a conservator from the bids received, a process that will take about 30 days. All parties involved will then come to an agreement on a final proposal

Council Considers Greenbelt Station Zoning, Buses, More

by Nora Eckert

The Greenbelt City Council discussed Greenbelt Station zoning, safe and efficient busing for students, overcrowding at schools and a variety of other issues at a worksession held at the Municipal Building on Monday, October 1.

Mayor Emmett Jordan led the nearly three-hour meeting which included comments from Prince George's County Public Schools Chief Operating Officer Dr. Wesley Watts and District 2 Board Member Lupi Quinteros-Grady.

Greenbelt Station Zoning

One of the topics raised at the meeting concerned Greenbelt Station residents attending Greenbelt city schools. Grady and Watts stated that Greenbelt Station residents have the ability to send their children to Greenbelt Elementary if they choose to, however, the option of attending

GES Families and Volunteers Refurbish Butterfly Gardens

by Camila Velloso

Parents, students and volunteers gathered on a sunny Saturday morning to cultivate the butterfly gardens outside of Greenbelt Elementary School (GES) for Beautification Day.

Over the summer, Ingrid Haas, the event organizer and dedicated parent volunteer, helped maintain the gardens. "I came and weeded in August," she said. "It was quite overgrown at this point."

The gardens were originally part of a green initiative program designed by the school. When the project first began in 2015, parents agreed that "there were so many good things going on inside the school and the outside needed to reflect that," Haas explained.

GES received its certification as a Green School in 2018, according to the Maryland Association for Environmental and Outdoor Education.

The gardens also offer parents and students the opportunity to connect with nature and give back to the school. "It gives them a sense of ownership and pride," Haas said.

Due to budget cuts, the PTA's involvement with the project expanded considerably. Throughout the semester, GES parents frequently work on the gardens after dropping their children off at school in the morning.

During this year's Beautification Day, volunteers could be seen replacing the mulch,

Editorial

Free Press May Allow Content Not All Will Like

Recently a letter to the editor (September 13, 'Offended by Ad') stated that the News Review's "need for advertising revenue" was why we ran an advertisement that the letter writer (and others) deplored.

We weren't surprised at the criticism of us or the advertisement. But in a free-market society, advertising a product or point of view is part of having a free press. The constraint is that the advertisement doesn't break the law, incite hatred or violence, or demean a person or group. Whether or not the News Review staff resonate to the product promoted or the advertiser's strategy or aesthetic sensibility is of no consequence to our decision on running it. We admit to needing revenue, but if money was our only motive this newspaper would have folded decades ago.

Ads we reject (lost revenue notwithstanding) don't get published, thus readers have no way to know that we do, in fact, refuse them. We don't put a space in the paper and label it 'Rejected Advertisement.' For example, an ad we received a few months ago seemed to us to foster hatred against a specific group based on unproven statements offered as fact. We refused the ad, just as we have refused some letters to the editor for similar reasons. We do not, however, refuse advertisements or letters just because we don't like the cut of someone's jib or think some of our readers may be offended. In the September 13 issue, neither the ad itself nor the billboard strategy used to promote the business breaks the law, demeans an individual or group or incites hatred against others. That readers may think the truck-billboards should be prohibited isn't pertinent to whether the News Review runs the ad. We cleave to fairness. We print letters critical of this newspaper. We avoid taking sides - including sides we may believe in as individuals. Freedom of the press demands no less.

Archive Project Needs Volunteers

The Greenbelt Archive Project has completed the setup of its facility and is working with the University of Maryland Digitization Laboratory to set up processing of the papers. The first task is the preparation of 1943 to 1963 newspapers for digitization by UMD's third-party contractor. Then the bulk of the papers (1964 through 2001) will be prepared for digitization. This work is repetitive and requires care but is not physically hard. This work takes place in the Community Center and cannot be done from home. It is also a valid way for high school students to earn service hours. Shifts are two hours in length and are available at a variety of times during the week and on weekends during the day or evening. The minimum commitment is one shift a week, most weeks. Volunteers will be provided with hands-on training.

In addition to scanning preparation, assistance is needed with potential scripting to assist in the efficient transfer and processing of incoming files. This work (on a PC running Windows 10) can be done primarily at home and then be installed at the facility. Additionally, there are opportunities to manage the website and to assist in scheduling and tracking volunteer time.

Interested residents should email newsreview.archive@gmail.com with contact information and a few sentences about themselves or call 301-655-7008.

Marjorie Wilkinson

Marjorie Lee Wilkinson

Marjorie Lee (Margie) Wilkinson, 80, died September 13, 2018, at her daughter's home in Purcellville, Va., after a brief battle with cancer.

Born in Indianapolis, Ind., to Virgil Bankson and Margaret Rodby, Ms. Wilkinson and her family moved to Washington, D.C., in the early 1940s. In 1948 her family relocated to Tokyo, Japan, where her father had joined Gen. Douglas MacArthur's staff as an economist working on stabilization of the yen. During the 1950s she also lived in Djakarta, Indonesia, and Taipei, Taiwan.

She lived in the 3 Court of Laurel Hill Road for many years, and particularly enjoyed walking around the lake. The house was known for the amazing peony and iris garden started by her mother.

Ms. Wilkinson retired two years ago from the Washington-based Federation for American Immigration Reform, where she was a grant writer. Previously, she worked on Capitol Hill as a staff member for the late Senator George McGovern (D-S.D.). She also had worked as an office assistant with a law firm in St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands.

Ms. Wilkinson was a graduate of Coolidge Senior High School in Washington, D.C., and she attended the University of Maryland.

Ms. Wilkinson is predeceased by her sister, Jane Ellyn, and her son, Brian David. She is survived by her daughter, Mary Lisa Wilkinson, of Purcellville, Va.; granddaughter Hayley Taylor, of Front Royal, Va.; grandson Marshall Wilkinson, of Flagstaff, Ariz.; grandson John Mlinarcik, of Purcellville, Va.; great-grandson Theodore Taylor, of Front Royal, Va., and brother Ross Bankson, of Fairfax, Va.

Ms. Wilkinson requested that no funeral service or memorial be held. She asked that her ashes be scattered in the Chesapeake Bay. The surviving family requests that, in lieu of sending flowers, friends and family direct their time and attention to support the passage of state and national death-with-dignity laws, also known as medical aid in dying.

Blessing and Photos for All Animals at Mowatt UMC

Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church will conduct a Blessing of the Animals on Sunday, October 7 at 4:15 p.m., rain or shine. Well-socialized animals on a leash or in a carrier are welcome. Photos of pets unable to attend can also be blessed. Children who do not have a pet may bring a favorite stuffed animal to be blessed.

Following the Blessing the Greenbelt Community Animal Response Team (GCART) will be available to take a photo of owners and companion animals which will be sent to the owner's email address. These photos are a reminder to residents of the importance of having an up-to-date photo with their pet, making it easier to reunite owners with pets during an emergency. It is also important to have a family emergency plan that includes the family pets.

A memorial service will follow to remember all the pets who have died this year. Bring a photo of the pet to add to the memory board. Light refreshments will be served in honor of Puddin' White who died on June 1. In addition to being a great pet, Puddin' was a therapy dog who participated in Read to Rover at the Greenbelt Library.

Any donations received by GCART will go toward a city disaster relief trailer that will enable GCART to respond to local emergencies and disasters. The trailer will carry all the equipment and supplies required for a 65-animal temporary shelter. Once GCART raises $12,000, the American Kennel Club Disaster Relief Program will match it with a $10,000 grant and purchase the trailer, which will become the property of the city. To date GCART has raised almost $9,000.

Call 301-474-9410 for further information or visit the church website at greenbeltumc.org. For more information about GCART send an email to greenbeltcart@gmail.com or call 301-848-0914.

Condolences to the family and friends of longtime Greenbelt resident Margie Wilkinson who died in September. She lived in the 3 Court of Laurel Hill Road and was noted for carrying on her mother's amazing iris and peony gardens.

Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) has become an even larger question.

Darlene Jean-Pierre, a resident of Greenbelt Station, attended the meeting to voice her concerns about the zoning restrictions that limit residents in her area from sending their children to ERHS. Jean-Pierre attended the same meeting last year and voiced similar concerns.

She acknowledges that council members, school board and other representatives have a heavy workload with many and diverse issues to deal with. Nevertheless, she is frustrated with the lack of action on this issue, pleading that something should be done sooner rather than later so children who live in Greenbelt Station have the opportunity to attend ERHS.

"As taxpayers in Greenbelt, for the resources available for Greenbelt kids, it's unfortunate we don't have that opportunity," Jean-Pierre says.

The discussion about Greenbelt Station led to a larger discourse about overcrowding in local schools. Watts described plans to look into alternative building materials to lower construction costs, as well as the use of temporary classrooms.

Bus Issues

Grady and Watts reported that they have been hard at work since the start of this school year. Grady reported she would be visiting 10 schools in the near future to conduct important sit-down discussions. These discussions will likely include talk of the Prince George's County busing system which was a major focus of the meeting. Both Greenbelt and all of Prince George's County have encountered issues with hiring and retaining bus drivers. "Bus drivers are harder to hire than teachers," Watts said. The county has developed tools, such as online resources and new mobile apps, to assist parents and students to clarify their bus routes and schedules. These measures should ease the large number of calls they receive at their busing hotline, which Watts said received between 2,000 to 5,000 daily calls during the first week of school.

The meeting covered a wide range of issues with several proposed or ongoing plans for immediate action. As Joe McNeal from the Greenbelt Recreation Department said in regard to improving the fields at Greenbelt Middle School, "It's National Cop Month! Let's work together."

weeding overgrown flower beds and trimming hedges in preparation for wintertime. "This pretty much takes care of the whole season that's coming up," Haas said. "In the spring, bulbs come up and it just looks nice."

"It's also a community-building event," Haas added.

Even though she just started kindergarten at GES, Dora McKenzie, age 5, attended Beautification Day with her parents Eric McKenzie and Raluca Rosca.

"I saw the email call for help," Eric McKenzie said. "I thought it would be a good idea to come and help out with the school grounds."

"I think it's important to teach our kids to take care of their school and to help," Rosca said.

Several volunteers turned out in support of Beautification Day despite the event being held later than usual. "I'm afraid that the weather wasn't our friend this year," Haas said. "But we are going to get so much done just with these people."

As a result of their hard work, Haas has received several comments in praise of the gardens. "It really makes a difference when you come to school and there are flowers everywhere," she said.

Volunteers work on Beautification Day at Greenbelt Elementary.

to retain high quality and diverse teachers and leaders; college and career readiness pathways for students (such as free tuition at community college, like the pilot program at Prince George's Community College); and more resources for at-risk students; and governance and accountability.

Students moved from one place to another in the room to rank these goals and give their opinions about the quality of education Maryland students receive. They rated Maryland schools a grade of C, taking into account that many schools are without access to sufficient funding, adequate supplies or good teachers. Francaviglia pointed to statistics showing that Maryland is the only state where average National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) scores in math and reading at grades 4 and 8 decreased between 2013 and 2015. Francaviglia stated that, after adjusting for differences in student background, Maryland falls from 23rd to 37th among states. "Our wealthy students are masking the performance of those who are poor," Francaviglia said. In 2002, 22 percent of Maryland students were in poverty, but 44 percent are impoverished today, he added.

The Kirwan Commission was established in 2016 to follow up on a previous commission formed in 2002, the Thornton Commission, which instituted funding formulas to ensure that education spending was equitable around the state. According to marylandeducators.org, "the Bridge to Excellence in Public Schools Act of 2002, commonly referred to as Thornton, established a state school aid formula to ensure that schools and school systems have the resources necessary to provide every child with an adequate and equitable education. ... Since FY 2008, Thornton has been adjusted primarily by changes in enrollment and capped inflation. Local school systems are given broad flexibility to decide how to best utilize state aid to meet the needs of their students." Washington referred to the policies that will come out of the Kirwan Commission as "the most important policies that will be implemented for the next 15 years."

Getting Involved

Francaviglia told student leaders how to get involved in the work his organization is doing to advocate for education at the grassroots level. Strong Schools Maryland recruits 10-person teams around the state who meet monthly to learn about issues affecting Maryland education and who take action using materials provided by the organization. Teams can be made up of students, neighbors, friends, members of civic or religious groups or anyone concerned about the quality of education in Maryland.

Students spoke up about the need to update books and curricula and to train teachers to a current standard. They mentioned how students in Baltimore City or even at DuVal High School don't have access to the same resources. One student spoke eloquently about socioeconomic gaps that can mean that areas with a high concentration of people of color face greater problems.

Quinteros-Grady told students that the development of policy takes time, and implementation can take even longer. As an example, her goal to provide students with 30 minutes of recess took three years to pass, yet implementation is still ongoing. She went on to describe the need for community schools coordinators, who help meet not just the academic needs but also the social and emotional needs of students.

Good Schools: Key

Because Maryland has a citizen legislature, delegates usually maintain full-time jobs outside the State House. To inform students about this, Washington spoke briefly about his background. Born in D.C., he was the oldest of six raised by a single mom, in and out of homelessness. He graduated from Laurel High School, studied criminal justice at the University of Maryland, worked for a county council member and was appointed in 2012 at age 26 as the youngest member of the state legislature. Washington works at CASA de Maryland as housing and community development manager. Quinteros-Grady also spoke about how she immigrated from El Salvador at age eight, earned a bachelor's degree from Goucher College and a master's in bilingual and special education from George Washington University. She is president and CEO of Latin American Youth Center.

"A good school system means everything else works right," Francaviglia told students. He went on to say, "Great ideas in your head mean nothing because they have to come out and become policy; without the force of law nothing happens. This matters, don't forget about it."

“Cooperatives See the Future” Is Theme of Co-op Month

by Leta Mach

This article is the second of a 2-part series.

Cooperatives have been working on behalf of their members and communities since 1844 when the Rochdale Equitable Pioneers Society opened a consumer co-op store in England. The success of the pioneers came from the practices and procedures under which they operated. These practices have been updated through the years by the International Cooperative Alliance (ICA) and they form the basis for today’s cooperative principles.

Economy

Members of a cooperative build a better world economically by working together. Members of the Greenbelt Federal Credit Union receive dividends, bonus dividends and low loan rates. As not-for-profit organizations, credit unions generally offer better rates than for-profit banks. Members of Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) can find affordable homes. Co-op Supermarket and Pharmacy members receive an annual patronage dividend based on the financial performance of the store. Likewise, members of the Greenbelt News Review may receive a dividend that depends upon the financial success of the paper. The volunteer work of Greenbelt Nursery School members helps the school provide high-quality early childhood education at a modest cost. Greenbelt MakerSpace Cooperative members save money by learning how to repair equipment.

Democracy

The principle that cooperatives maintain their autonomy and independence is closely linked to the principle of democratic control. Cooperatives are autonomous, self-help organizations controlled by their members. As such, they hold annual meetings and elect a board of directors to set policy. The Greenbelt News Review and the Co-op Supermarket hold annual meetings in the fall and they each have seven board members. The Credit Union, GHI, the New Deal Café and the Nursery School hold their annual meetings in the spring. The Credit Union has seven board members plus three credit committee members who are elected. GHI members elect nine board members, three audit committee members and five nominations and elections committee members. The Nursery School board is comprised of seven committee chairpersons, four elected executive members and the schools’ director and administrator. MakerSpace members attend meetings, vote on policies and procedures and decide which programs to offer. Many co-ops, such as GHI, Nursery School, Credit Union and Co-op Supermarket, hire managers to run the day-to-day business.

Membership

Voluntary and open membership is the first principle listed by ICA. In many respects this is because cooperatives are membership organizations and without member support they will not succeed. Co-ops are open to all people able to use their services and willing to accept the responsibilities of membership. When a family enrolls in the Nursery School, they become members of that co-op. Their responsibilities include participating in every aspect of the school’s operation from governance to fundraising to maintenance. After finding a GHI home, potential members apply for membership and their responsibilities include paying their monthly co-op fee, which covers taxes, reserve contributions, maintenance, insurance on the structure, trash collection and administrative costs. Volunteers who work regularly become members of the News Review. With as little as $10, anyone can become a member of the Co-op Supermarket. When their capital account is $100 or higher, they become voting members. A critical member responsibility is to shop at the store. Members of the Credit Union also have a responsibility to use the Credit Union’s services and maintain a minimum balance in their share savings account, which makes them members of the financial co-op. When MakerSpace converted to a community co-op early this year, founding members became co-owners for a membership fee of $20 per year.

Co-op Principles

Cooperatives build a better world by providing their member-owners a variety of services and giving their member-owners a say in how the business is operated. Many surveys have shown that people trust cooperatives and prefer to do business with cooperatives because of their values and principles. These are the values and principles under which Greenbelt’s many cooperatives also operate.

City Notes

Public Works participated in a demonstration by a South African company using robotics to CCTV the Greenbelt Lake dam concrete pipe.

Refuse/Recycling/Sustainability/Environmental crews collected 31.30 tons of refuse and 13.28 tons of recyclable material.

Facilities maintenance installed purple lights at city buildings for October’s Domestic Violence Month.

Animal Control impounded a stray dog, removed a kitten from a car engine, impounded a cat after an eviction, removed a squirrel carcass and assisted a citizen with dog spay procedures. Two cats and one dog were adopted.

CARES’ Judy Hering, hosted by the Springhill Lake Recreation Center, began classes: GED on Mondays and ESOL on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Journey to SCT Wellness 5K Builds Sickle Cell Awareness

by Jamal Williams

Racers gather for the 5K. This year’s T-shirt features an image of Journey which was particularly significant because the race marked her 16th birthday.

The second annual Journey to SCT Wellness 5K took place on Saturday, September 29 at Buddy Attick Park. The goal: to bring awareness of sickle cell trait (SCT), a condition that affects the lives of many, especially those of African descent.

The race was organized by Brian and Camille Butler, a couple who started the nonprofit Journey to Happiness Movement Inc. in honor of their late daughter, Journey Bessai GyeNyame Butler. Journey, they say, was a brilliant student, exceptional athlete and a wonderful daughter. Like many people her age she excelled at whatever she put her mind to. However, she also dealt with the complications that came with having the sickle cell trait.

SCT can be inherited by a person with one normal gene and one sickle cell gene. When both parents carry the trait, children have a 50 percent chance of inheriting it and a 25 percent chance of inheriting sickle cell disease. The trait can be identified with a simple blood test.

Journey experienced side-pains near her kidneys, loss of weight and frequent urination. Her parents did not initially think much of it, as doctors told them that SCT was “nothing to worry about.”

In February 2016, Journey’s parents took her for an ultrasound to investigate her constant kidney pain. The results changed their lives. Journey was diagnosed with renal medullary carcinoma (RMC), a rare kidney cancer associated with SCT. The cancer tends to be aggressive and difficult to treat, and Journey learned she had a short amount of time left to live.

Journey died five months later at the age of 13. Her father described the form of cancer as “a silent assassin,” leaving little to no time for him or his wife to try and prevent the disease from consuming their daughter.

Rather than dwelling on their loss, the Butlers decided to alert others about the dangers of SCT in the hopes that other children wouldn’t meet the same fate as Journey. This determination has kept them moving forward these months and years since Journey’s death.

The Butlers are collaborating with Lois Rosado to help pass Maryland House Bill 1414, Sickle-Cell Trait Screening, Treatment, Education and Public Awareness. The bill (also called Journey’s Law) requires every child with SCT and playing a sport to be screened via ultrasound of their kidneys. Early detection is key to treating and preventing sickle cell disease.

As difficult as it has been to move on from their daughter’s death, the Butlers’ determination and energy to combat this disease shows their passion to make a difference. The 5K is another example of how the Butlers have brought people together in the hope of tackling SCT and RMC quickly.

Public Art Discussed During City Council Worksession

by Colleen Curran

Public artwork in Greenbelt can be used to advance Greenbelt's historic cultural legacy, affirm community values and further civic goals, according to the Arts Advisory Board arts policy document. The document was presented on Wednesday, September 26 as part of the board's worksession with the Greenbelt City Council and continuing discussion about guidelines for public arts policy implementation.

The arts board defines public art as artwork in any medium which is exhibited or otherwise presented for any duration in a public space or in a privately-owned space which is publicly accessible without charge. Public art can be programmed by the city or another sponsor, or presented independently by artists acting within the scope of applicable laws and regulations. Art is for all who see or interact with it; it is meant for community engagement.

Nicole DeWald, arts supervisor for the City of Greenbelt, and Greg Varda, assistant director of recreation programs, drafted guidelines in support of the art board's public art policy for Wednesday's meeting. They explained how recreation staff forecasts implementing the board's public arts policy.

The draft offered a chart of possible city facilities where public art might be appropriate. It included different ways in which the city can display art, including performances and public screenings as well as exhibitions of both temporary and long-term indoor and outdoor visual art displays. "The draft works for small projects all the way up to multi-year projects," said Tatiana Ausema, a board member. Scalability is important and "I think we've captured it well."

The drafted guidelines also included information concerning loans and gifts, commissions of new artwork and also maintenance and management of existing and future art exhibits in Greenbelt, which was a concern for some councilmembers. "We love art. We want to have art," said Councilmember Judith Davis. Council wants to protect and preserve preexisting art as well as new art that will be created as a result of this new policy.

The Greenbelt Recreation Department will work with the board and the community to provide fair opportunities for all artists, while respecting input from the public. According to DeWald, the guidelines are framed to make the restrictions minimal so the Greenbelt arts staff can be receptive to all art proposals. But the board is for public participation as well and encourages people to join, said DeWald. "It's not just residents. It's not just the council. There are a lot of stakeholders," said Ausema. She emphasized that even though the public arts policy is focused on creating several opportunities for artists, it is designed to make sure everybody has a voice in the process.

DeWald described a thorough process detailing the steps for art proposals in Greenbelt under this policy: The Greenbelt Arts staff will gather information with the arts board to determine where an art commission should be located and if there are any requirements for that particular space. If approved by the board, the proposal will earn preliminary support.

The recreation department will then recommend the space to council. Council will then offer an appropriate budget if the project is approved. Council will nominate an ad hoc Public Art Project Committee approved by the city manager to provide support for the chosen commission throughout the entire process.

The Public Art Project Committee will consist of three, five or seven members. One member shall be a Greenbelt Arts staff member. Moreover, any individual or group sponsoring 51 percent or more of the commissioned art will have representation on the committee. Other stakeholders – members of the community, including people who live near the commissioned art – are also welcome to join the committee.

The committee will look at all art proposals and vet the responses. Finalists will be given a stipend. Stipend and other information will be available at public meetings. The final choices will be assessed by city council, and should an artist be approved, the arts staff will draft a contract with the winner, subject to review and approval by any necessary departments as well as by the city manager.

The public arts policy has been in the works since 2009 and board members present at Wednesday's meeting mentioned the hard work of previous boards that helped make the policy possible today. "As the process has been developing, we're seeing more interest from the community for more art displays," said board member Mark Granfors-Hunt. "It's really nice to see it developing hand-in-hand."

New Task Force Will Focus On Bike, Pedestrian Safety

by John Campanile

The newly formed City of Greenbelt Bicycle and Pedestrian Task Force met for the first time on Thursday, September 6. The task force was initiated by Mayor Emmett Jordan and Councilmember Colin Byrd, and consists of residents who are bicycling and pedestrian enthusiasts.

The task force will review the city's transportation infrastructure by using the 2014 Pedestrian and Bicyclist Master Plan as a blueprint and make recommendations for continued enhancements and improvements based on that study.

Among the many issues to be addressed by the task force include:

- * Identifying hot spots (areas that present a particular hazard to bicyclists and pedestrians), which should be addressed for safety concerns,

- * Recommending the placement of road "sharrows" (on-street lane markings) and Share the Road signage, and improving pedestrian amenities and crossings,

- * Safety awareness and education efforts for auto and non-auto road users,

- * Promoting non-automotive awareness to the community while strengthening bonds with local governments and advocacy organizations,

- * Improving overall conditions for bicyclists and pedestrians, thereby providing an enhanced alternative to the automobile and a culture for walking and bicycling.

Other ideas brought up by task force members include organizing community bicycle rides on local streets and trails and walking tours.

On the formation of the task force, Jordan commented, "I'm glad to see this citywide committee come together. The group will be in a position to provide advice and support for the Advisory Planning Board and city council as decisions are made about improving bicycle and pedestrian safety in Greenbelt."

Straus' Work

Lenore Thomas Straus (1909-1988) was commissioned by the Federal Resettlement Administration to create the sculptures. Her work, spanning the years 1937 to 1967, is installed in many states, including Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C., and as far away as Norway. The two Greenbelt works employ the style of social realism, often seen in Soviet-era art, which depicts the "common, average working man," in "stocky, sturdy forms," said Young. A native of Chicago, Straus was greatly influenced by a similar style of design she had seen there and incorporated that into these works.

The Preamble, consists of seven bas reliefs, and depicts constitutional values such as justice and promoting the common good.

Young feels that the common good relief is the most closely attached to the community, depicting the struggle to build a green space environment through planting flowers and highly prescient in its image of a family standing strong versus an impending war machine, an outcome that was still yet to occur prior to World War II.

Mother and Child took a year to finish and was created in Straus's home studio in Accokeek, Md. Made from limestone, the final product weighs 15 tons. Young elaborated that the style for Mother and Child was seen as strange and off-putting to many at first because of its monolithic starkness. Young said that the work has been the victim of vandalism over the years, from burning tires to an actual attempt to tear it down with chains and a truck. Yet, said Young, the piece has definitively come into its own now and has become an image synonymous with the city.

National Public Lands Day Observed at Dora Kennedy

by Elena Macias

On Saturday, September 29, the Dora Kennedy French Immersion School held its own National Public Lands Day. Volunteers from CHEARS, Integrated Life Sciences from University of Maryland, Sigma Alpha Beta Alpha Chapter Agriculture in the Community Outreach group from University of Maryland, members of the DKFI PTA and students from Eleanor Roosevelt High School arrived to help cover bare areas in the play area, build a pollinator garden and help reduce erosion.

The Dora Kennedy French Immersion School's children's bare play area was a cause for concern for school faculty and parents. Using wheelbarrows and rakes, volunteers spread mulch around the play area covering up many of the rocks and sticks.

While watching volunteers work together, Maggie Cahalan, one of the volunteers with CHEARS, felt proud knowing they were working together for an important cause.

"This event is so important because it demonstrates that we all care about public land," said Cahalan. "It's kind of a rare opportunity that this involves students from the University of Maryland, residents from Greenbelt and other people to help with a project like this. You form a bond working together." "We like to work!" said two young CHEARS volunteers, echoing Cahalan's thought while expressing their delight at having the opportunity to refurbish the area.

The volunteers experienced a sense of community and budding camaraderie as they worked together to reduce erosion and create a safer playing environment for the students. The event was scheduled regardless of weather but fortunately the volunteers enjoyed a beautiful day. In total, 62 people volunteered and collected 248 volunteer hours in the process, part of the requirement for graduation.

Greenbelter Wins County Garden Beautification Award

by Lois Rosado

On Wednesday, September 26 the Prince George's County Beautification Committee held its 48th Anniversary Beautification Awards Ceremony. These garden awards are divided between residential gardens and community entrances or common areas. A gardener or landscaping service can compete to be recognized.

This year An Y. Chung of Greenbelt received a Superior Sustained Maintenance Award. In 2017 she received her first Beautification Award for her garden located in Windsor Terrace. If she continues to receive a Superior Sustained Maintenance Award for the next four years, she will be eligible for a Golden Trowel award.

Dr. Richard T. Olsen, the director of the U.S. National Arboretum and former Greenbelt resident, gave an informative presentation and slide show about various gardens around the world that he had visited. After the ceremony, Dr. Olsen mentioned that he was surprised that more Greenbelt residents were not receiving awards because he knew firsthand that many Greenbelters have beautiful gardens.

Hopefully next year more Greenbelters will be recognized for their lovely gardens.

Non-Human Loved Ones

by Sharon Taylor Allemann

Do you have a dog? Do you have a little dog that stays indoors most of the time? Or maybe a big, furry, big-eyed dog? All dogs look cute and adorable when they're young. The longer you have a dog the more attached to you it becomes. I think it would be hard to no longer have this wonderful pet that definitely shows affection for you.

Cats are also so delightful when they too are very young. They are so lovely whether their hair is long or short and for their special show of affection. It's fun to watch cats at play. They can bat a little false mouse all around a room or try to catch a string dragged along the ground. Many cats are "outside" cats, meaning they generally have access to the out-of-doors, or they could be "inside" cats that live their lives inside a home. Both can be quite entertaining for their owners.

I have a cat right now. She's white with black ears and a black tail. I adopted her when she was three years old and had already had a litter of kittens. She is and always has been rather small. She's been a delight right from the beginning. Lili is an inside cat because coyotes in the area where I live are known to catch and eat small dogs and cats.

I guess you wonder why I bring up this subject of cats and dogs. Well, in the beginning of my town, Greenbelt, the adult residents voted to not allow any of these named pets. Why? It seems that people everywhere loved to have a dog or cat or both as pets.

To give information as to why such a rule would be voted on you need to look at the town housing. The homes are row houses. There may be four to six homes attached to each other. A barking dog could definitely be a disturbance for your neighbors as could a cat that liked to dig up the flowers in gardens other than your own. Some people have a fear of dogs or cats and may prefer to live where they need not see or hear these pets. Today it seems that more and more people are allergic to dogs or cats.

Did this affect our growing children? I'm inclined to say no. I alone am a good example. While growing up in Greenbelt I never had a cat or dog for a pet but I still learned to enjoy having one. I have had several cats in my life away from Greenbelt and I enjoy dogs of all sorts. I often thought I would someday have a German shepherd. Perhaps movies and radio programs during the war influenced me.

There has been a big change in Greenbelt now. When I last visited I found that many people had dogs. Cats were around also but less visible. Missing now were all the hedges that marked boundaries like fences. In place were now many chain link fences to keep the dogs inside the various home lawns. This does not look very pleasing like the hedges that had been planted by the town around every home. I must say that the no dog or cat rule was perhaps a good thing or perhaps another fence could be used like a picket fence or chain link fencing. I find offense with the chain link fences and I do and did like the unity of all row houses having the same type of fencing.

I do like dogs and cats as pets but where, why and how they live should perhaps be considered as the original pioneer residents did.

I sure would like to see Greenbelt looking as good as in the past when all the fences were the same (hedged). How about picket fences: After all, Greenbelt is a very special town.

Sharon Taylor Allemann is a Greenbelt pioneer, having arrived here in 1937. She remained a resident until 1960. In sending her story to the News Review she wrote, "I have always thought that Greenbelt was a very special town." She now lives in California.

Edmonston, Ridge, Greenbelt Roads on Old Maps

by James Giese

This is the third of a five-part series of articles about historic roads in the Greenbelt area. The primary sources for information for these articles are maps accessible on the Library of Congress website: a circa 1861 map, Martenet's Map of Prince George's County by Simon J. Martenet, loc.gov/resource/g3843p\_la000302/; and county and Vansville District maps found in an 1878 Atlas of Prince George's County and in an 1879 Atlas of fifteen miles around Washington, including the county of Montgomery, Maryland, both by G. M. Hopkins, loc.gov/resource/g3850m.gct00186/?st=gallery. This map is also included in Greenbelt: History of a New Town, 1937-1987, Mary Lou Williamson, general editor.

Edmonston Road was the principal north-south route from Bladensburg to what is now the Greenbelt area, according to the old maps. (Captain James Edmonston acquired land just north of Bladensburg in 1742, according to the Town of Edmonston website). While Kenilworth Avenue has replaced much of Edmonston Road, sections just north of Bladensburg, through Berwyn Heights just west of Kenilworth Avenue and between Greenbelt Road and Springhill Court in Greenbelt West, are all parts of the 1861 mapped roadway.

From Springhill Court, old Edmonston Road bent to the northeast to tie into and become what we now call Ridge Road near Ivy Lane, but that section was obliterated by the construction of the Beltway-Kenilworth Avenue interchange in 1963.

In 1878, a driveway led west from Edmonston Road to Flavinia Turner's home and the 1861 map marks the residence of Mrs. Turner at the same place. She was heir to Wildcat Farm, acquired in 1759 by Shadrick Turner. The family burial ground is now the Greenbelt Cemetery on Ivy Lane.

Ridge Road

What is now called Ridge Road, between Crescent Road and the bend just past Ivy Lane where the Greenbelt Police Station and city animal shelter are, was built at the time of Beltway construction. At the same time, Crescent Road was shifted a bit north, the old road becoming the access road to Buddy Attick Park and Greenbelt Public Works.

In 1878, Edmonston Road curved to become Ridge Road at about where the Lakeside North apartments are now located. Even today, it is possible to identify an abandoned segment of that old road running northeast between Kenilworth Avenue and the 1960s relocated Ridge Road.

At the Lakeside North apartments, the 1861 Ridge Road climbed up a hill, reportedly the second highest elevation in the county. Somewhere before or up that hill in 1861 and 1878, a road branched off to the northwest to rejoin the Edmonston Road we now know north of Sunnyside Avenue. This jog in Edmonston Road may have been done to make an easier crossing of Beaverdam Creek, which has an extensive floodplain where the current Edmonston Road crosses it.

Then and now, Edmonston continued to the north until it intersected the Baltimore-Washington Turnpike (now old Baltimore Pike) near Odell Road.

At the top of the hill, Ridge Road continued east in 1861 as it does now, passing the home of B. K. Morsel, which was possibly located near the current water tank behind Boxwood Village.

Laurel Hill Road

The now paved segment of Ridge between Lastner Lane and Laurel Hill Road is probably a part of the historic old road. After heading east a ways, the 1861 map shows the road taking a sharp turn to the left to head in a north-northeast direction. Laurel Hill Road might have been constructed on that old road bed, when the federal government built the Defense Homes – now called frame homes in what is now Greenbelt Homes, Inc. – at the start of World War II. At the end of Laurel Hill is a woodland path that may also be a part of the old road.

The 1861 and 1878 road meandered through what is now the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC) towards the northeast, intersecting what is now Beaverdam Road about where the Baltimore-Washington Parkway now crosses it. That road no longer exists in BARC, although remnants might still be found as farm roads.

Between Laurel Hill and Beaverdam Roads, the extension of Ridge Road shown on the 1878 map intersected a minor road running southward somewhere in BARC. That road met Branchville Road (now Greenbelt Road/Md. 193) at its eastern terminus in 1878 and continued southward ending at Annapolis Road (Md. 450) just before that road crossed the Pennsylvania Railroad (now Amtrak).

From Branchville, now Greenbelt Road south to Annapolis Road, that 1878 road is probably Cipriano Road.

Greenbelt Road

A road that ran east from Edmonston Road in 1861 is the forerunner of Greenbelt Road. The road went past the home of J. (Joseph) W. Walker, in what is now the Golden Triangle, and possibly to Greenbelt East. According to the Alan Virta article in Greenbelt: History of a New Town, 1937-1987, Isaac Walker received a land grant for that property in 1757 and built his home, Taoping Castle, sometime later. The home, located between Capitol Cadillac and the Beltway, remained until the early 1960s and remnants of its foundation still exist. Up the hill, beyond the end of Walker Drive next to Indian Springs is the family cemetery, now city parkland.

The 1878 map shows that same road, but now extended to the west to the other side of the B&O Railroad tracks, to what is now Rhode Island Avenue. An unimproved road went even farther west, to the Baltimore Turnpike. That road was called Branchville Road until Greenbelt was built and the road substantially widened and realigned.

In this map of the Greenbelt area from the 1878 Atlas for Prince George's County, north is at an angle to the left of straight up. The road running in a general east-west direction from Branchville is Branchville Road (now Greenbelt). On that road is the home of L. J. Walker, Taoping Castle (underlined in blue), now the Golden Triangle office park. The road in the center running nearly vertical is Edmonston Road which becomes old Ridge Road at about Flavinia Turner's home (also underlined). The no-longer-existing road heading northwest from Ridge becomes what is Edmonston after crossing Beaverdam Creek. The home of B. K. Morsel is also underlined. That may be the current location of the water tower behind Boxwood Village off Ridge Road. Further to the right on Ridge from the intersection at the sharp turn to the northeast, the historic road might now be Laurel Hill Road. On the right of the map is a north-south road that intersects with the eastern terminus of Branchville (now Greenbelt) Road. North of Branchville, that road could now be Explorer Road at Goddard Space Flight Center. South of Branchville Road that road is probably Cipriano Road. Running vertically on the left side of the map to Beltsville from Branchville are the Baltimore-Washington Road (no longer a turnpike, as depicted on the 1861 map) and the Washington Branch of the B&O Railroad.

Fatal Greenbelt Road Crash Kills Driver, Injures Seven

by Lesley Kash

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

A five-vehicle crash on Greenbelt Road near Kenilworth Avenue on Thursday, September 27 killed the driver, hospitalized seven others and closed Greenbelt Road in both directions. The driver was identified by Prince George's County Police as 43-year-old Derrick Gordon of Northeast Washington.

An initial investigation found that Gordon, the driver and sole occupant of a Honda heading west on Greenbelt Road around 9:10 a.m., rear-ended a mini-van and then hit a bus, according to Prince George's County Fire and Emergency Medical Service Spokesman Mark Brady. Gordon was pronounced dead at the scene. Seven other passengers and drivers were hospitalized with apparently non-life-threatening injuries.

In their rounds, Greenbelt Police officers discovered the accident and called it in, as 911 calls began pouring in from other drivers.

"Greenbelt police handled traffic control," according to George Mathews, public information liaison for the Greenbelt Police Department, "as well as assisting county police with their investigation in any way needed."

A hazmat team cleared spilled fuel from the roadway. Westbound lanes of Greenbelt Road remained closed for most of the day with traffic diverted onto Kenilworth.

The cause of the crash is under investigation.
