County Still Behind the Curve But Locals Start to Get Shots

by Cathie Meetre

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

Despite delivering more doses in the last week than previously and getting over the 25,000-shot barrier for first vaccinations, Prince George's County still lags well behind any other county in Maryland as a percentage – though it's rising fast. Using the county's updated numbers (which are not yet included in the state website), first doses have been given to about 3 percent of residents – double last week's ratio. Montgomery County is at ~4.66 percent of its somewhat larger population, with Talbot County having the largest percentage vaccinated (10.7) and Baltimore County the largest count of first vaccinations at just over 56,000 or 6.9 percent of the population.

Sample statistics show the percentage of population vaccinated and total first/second vaccinations. Counties with small populations, like Talbot, tend to have disproportionately higher percentages. Baltimore and Montgomery Counties and Baltimore City (32,398/5.5 percent) are more like Prince George's in being urban. For the latest available state numbers see coronavirus.maryland.gov/#Vaccine – click on Vaccine Data.

Overbooking

Potential Greenbelt recipients, lacking any sense of security that they'll get a slot through the county, are signing up at every outlet they can locate on the web. As a result, because these sites are not coordinated, resources may be wasted when the extra appointments individuals ultimately receive aren't needed and result in effort spent on rescheduling or appointments gone to waste. This is also likely to lead to overbooking issues as sites preemptively add more appointments than they actually have so that they don't have empty spaces – just like airlines – and then more show up than expected.

Purge Acceleration

Intervention with Prince George's County by Mayor Colin Byrd accelerated the purging from the county's vaccination appointments of non-residents, opening up significantly more slots for residents.

The addition of phase 1C on Monday, January 25, significantly increases the pool of eligible individuals. This phase includes ages 65 to 74 and additional front-line workers and is estimated to be about 90,000 strong in the county. A local commentator on the Greenbelt Facebook page describes it as "a lottery," and another bewails that there are forms to fill out for every ticket.

ACE Grants Fund Programs And Food at Local Schools

by Jon Gardner

At the Greenbelt City Council meeting on Monday, January 25, council approved 17 Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) grants to four local schools, for a total of $8,049.47. Council also approved ACE's recommendation to allocate an additional $3,600 to address food insecurity issues at the six schools that serve Greenbelt students.

ACE grants are available to teachers and parent-teacher organizations at Greenbelt schools. The grants are given in response to proposals for projects or items that enhance or enrich school-based activities. Proposals for teacher development projects are also solicited. The grants program is funded by the City of Greenbelt, and the selection of proposals for funding was made by the council based on recommendations from ACE.

This year the proposal submission process was moved entirely online. Some projects will be possible while schools are virtual and will be funded immediately. Other projects will be funded once school is back in person.

Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) won three grants,

Childs to Step Down After Three Years at GNR Helm

by Cathie Meetre

After three years at the helm of the Greenbelt News Review, Editor Gary Childs is moving on to pursue other life objectives. Editor Emerita Mary Lou Williamson has graciously agreed to step back into the editor role until the newspaper completes its search for a new long-term editor. This search, due to the pandemic, is currently on hold. The editorial staff is reorganizing itself and its processes to smooth the transition and keep the paper running as efficiently as ever in the interim.

Lively Approach

During his tenure as editor, Childs has expanded the paper's emphasis on sports and business news. Under his sway, the News Review has kept its familiar look while emphasizing a lively and pictorial approach to reporting. He describes achieving this balance as a "mixture of art and science." Childs also noted that, when he took on the role, he had no idea how much he would need to learn. He spoke of Unity-Umoja: Unifying our community as we strengthen our city.

This year the Greenbelt Black History and Culture Committee has an exciting array of virtual programs and one Popup Museum Exhibit of Black Artifacts. Their theme is Umoja, taken from the Swahili language, which means Unity. The picture shows the Adinkra symbol for unity which comes from the Gyaman people of Ghana and the Ivory Coast.

Greenbelt is a diverse city and most of the inhabitants appreciate its connections to the country's history and growth. The committee's goal is to enlighten and entertain residents of Greenbelt, as they celebrate the many contributions made by Black Americans to make America a great nation and strengthen the bonds of community.

Programs will begin on Saturday, February 6 and continue until February 28. Some performances are intended for youngsters and youth. Young people will delight in the puppet shows that will be presented for Artful Afternoon and the Poetry Slam that features youth from various public schools in the county. The entire program is printed on page 5, and weekly offerings will be highlighted.

The committee is appreciative of Greenbelt Recreation staff for their support and guidance in helping to present these virtual programs. The Greenbelt Museum will feature stories from Black Americans who helped to desegregate Greenbelt. They will be interviewed by Councilmember Emmett Jordan. GATE will broadcast weekly historical factoids. The recreation department will highlight four Americans who made significant contributions in

Letters to the Editor

Be a Good Neighbor

As the Covid-19 cases continue to rise and jobs and businesses continue to disappear, the toll on our residents goes unabated.

Consider donating stimulus checks to the City of Greenbelt's Good Samaritan Fund or the Emergency Assistance Fund to help our neighbors in need.

Jon Bell

Oh! What a State I'm in! Maryland!

Remember that State slogan from the '70s? It was Maryland's attempt to compete with "Virginia is for Lovers." Personally, I liked Maryland's short-lived slogan: I thought it was a very clever play on words. Much better than "Maryland is for Crabs."

Now, the rejected slogan can easily refer to the inept rollout of the Covid-19 vaccination. According to Beckers Hospital Review, as of January 22, Maryland's state ranking was 35th out of 50 at 39.7 percent doses administered versus doses distributed to the state. It would appear that short-supply is not the problem at the state level. Nationally, no state has administered all their allotted vaccine. The most efficient state in this metric is our neighbor, West Virginia at 72.28 percent. They must have it too easy with scattered population, mountains and twisting roads, compared with Maryland's large population centers.

Is it the state or county governments that exhibit this blasé attitude toward the vaccine rollout? How many Marylanders have to die before the state and county governments get their act together? Where is the outrage?

Could it be that there is a resistance of individuals to getting the vaccine? WTOP stated in their Friday, January 22, news broadcast that over one third of the health care professionals in the country have refused the vaccine! Some hospitals are offering a $500 bonus to get the shot, among other incentives.

Well, Prince George's County must be doing something right. According to NBC Washington news, "As many as 50 percent of people getting vaccinations in Prince George's County are from Montgomery and other counties." Montgomery County officials claim a shortage of the vaccine drove their residents to another county's services. Did the state get the county distribution wrong? If Montgomery County really did use all their supply, and half of our county's appointments, what does that say about our county's inoculation plan?

Prince George's County now does have a pre-registration online form that needs to be completed before getting an appointment. The websites the county created can be summed up in a short phrase: too complex, and inadequate for the load, therefore mostly broken. Our county is not alone. Florida had to put the brakes on inoculation tourism.

Finally, people with "appointments" in our county are waiting 2.5 hours and more to get their shot, according to WUSA9.

Where is the urgency? Hey folks, getting the vaccine administered IS a matter of LIFE and DEATH! Get on the stick!

Frank Kayser

(See Editor's note in box).

Editor's Note: On Tuesday, January 26, Prince George's County discontinued using the original Covid-19 vaccination sign-up website (which was the state's) that required so much information and gave slots to non-residents. The county's new preregistration form (<https://covid19vaccination.princegeorgescountymd.gov/>) is much simpler, requires no photographs and is filled out only once to cover county vaccination sites. The county has cancelled appointments made by nonresidents – freeing up some hundreds more appointments daily for residents.

the complexities not only of the newspaper production process, but of the paper's own vibe and its relationship with the city and its residents.

During a recent meeting, the newspaper's board thanked Childs for his service and dedication, noting that it is very much to his credit that for almost one-third of his time with the paper and while working 100 percent remotely, he successfully coped with the various difficulties resulting from the Covid-19 epidemic.

Keeping the Faith

Williamson has remained firmly attached to a newspaper she has nurtured for most of her adult life. During Childs' tenure, she has continued to provide senior-level copy editing and offered expert guidance and feedback on everything from commas to curmudgeons. Williamson also provides the perspective of decades of knowledge of the newspaper, the city and the personalities.

The editorial team surrounding her these coming months is intent on providing her with every assistance to ensure clear sailing and, for a few weeks in February, Childs will also remain on call to help out if necessary.

Managing Editor

Key player Amy Hansen is returning to the newspaper in the role of managing editor, reporting to Williamson. For the next few months she will be responsible for integrating the gathering and preparation of copy for publication – recommending stories, assigning writers, supporting students and shepherding material through the editing and production process. Hansen's educational background in journalism and lifetime experience in the field prepare her well for this position, which signals her return to the paper following a sabbatical she spent writing her most recent book.

Editor Search

The News Review hopes to find a new editor in the next several months, after its members are able to gather again in the newsroom. While the newspaper has been successfully produced every week, the camaraderie and social contact of the newsroom have been sorely missed since production went to mostly remote access in March 2020. When normal operations resume, the recruitment process can include visits, introductions and interviews that will improve the selection process for both the applicants and the newspaper.

Notwithstanding the hiatus in actively searching for an editor, those potentially interested in the role are encouraged to contact the newspaper at editor@greenbeltnewsreview.com at any time with a statement of interest.

Local Scientists Raise Concerns About Maglev Project Impacts

by Amy Carpenter-Driscoll

On January 15, the U.S. Department of Transportation-Federal Railroad Administration and Maryland Department of Transportation released the Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) for the Baltimore-Washington Superconducting Maglev Project, commonly known as “the Maglev.” The DEIS describes the proposed project, need, alternatives, current environmental conditions and potential impacts, and possible mitigation strategies. The report includes a comparative analysis between the No-Build Alternative and Build Alternatives so that citizens, representatives, stakeholders and businesses can review the potential environmental and human impacts of the Maglev.

The night prior to the DEIS release, the Maryland Coalition for Responsible Transit hosted a virtual public town hall to discuss the impacts of the Maglev project in Prince George’s County, including safety concerns, greenhouse gas emissions, environmental impacts, road congestion, community impacts, and alternative project ideas. Among the guest speakers were Dr. Owen Kelly, a NASA scientist whose research areas include atmospheric science, and Sam Droege, a wildlife biologist at the USGS Patuxent Wildlife Research Center.

Kelly challenged the Baltimore Washington Rapid Rail (BWRR), the company working to develop the Maglev, on its assertions that it would reduce carbon dioxide emission by 2 million short tons. “The only way I can see to do it is first you ignore the carbon dioxide to build the track. Then you ignore the carbon dioxide to generate the electricity that runs the train, and you only calculate the carbon dioxide in the advertised reduction in car travel, multiply it by a few decades, and you can get 2 million short tons in reduction,” said Kelly.

On the Facts page of the BWRR website, the FAQ regarding neighborhood and environmental impacts states that federal agencies will analyze the proposed project’s potential consequences. “If you see numbers on their website or Facebook and there aren’t background papers explaining how they got those numbers, you should be somewhat suspicious,” Kelly says. He published a blog post on the Sierra Club website detailing his calculations, positing that at between $5513 and $8269 per metric ton of reduced greenhouse gas emission, “Even if BWRR were correct ... the maglev would still be an embarrassingly expensive way to fight global warming.” Effective methods of reducing carbon dioxide emissions cost $100 per metric ton.

Droege spoke to the physical pathway of the Maglev, which would travel through the largest conservation area along the I-95 corridor between here and New York City. This protected area is comprised of federal lands owned by the National Park Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center, and state, county and private lands. He points out that the area functions as a whole, and “animals don’t know about boundaries, but they cross back and forth.” The habitat fragmentation that the Maglev project would cause would be detrimental to endangered species and habitats that do not exist elsewhere.

Droege raised another concern regarding the transfer of federal conservation lands to a private corporation. “This is precedent-setting,” he said. “None of these conservation areas, which have existed over 100 years, have ever been transferred to a private corporation.” He notes that this area is the only above-ground section of the entire project. “You could build another train line somewhere else, you cannot build another research center and animal conservation community somewhere else, so I ask you whether this is an appropriate giveaway of our lands.”

The City of Greenbelt has hired Jill Grant and Associates, an environmental law firm, to go through the environmental review process and make challenges and cases on behalf of the city. The DEIS is available for public review at bwmaglev.info/index.php/project-documents/deis. There is a 90-day comment period, ending April 22, 2021. Comments can be submitted by email to info@bwmaglev.info, by U.S. mail or through the online comment form at bwmaglev.info.

Remembering My Dad A Thank You to Greenbelt

Thank you to the News Review and to Jim Giese for the recent tribute to my father, Gerald (Jerry) Gough. In it, Mr. Giese reminded me that as children, my siblings and I never fully comprehended Dad's courageous leadership and pursuit of fairness – especially in voting access and equitable public transit. In this and all things, our mother Kathrine (Kathy) joined him to advocate for their shared democratic values, and they spent long nights talking about campaign and legislative strategy.

Their work continued when they moved to California, where dad could be found most weekends manning a voter registration table at one of the local shopping centers. He was proud to have registered over 500 voters in conservative Placer County. He didn't care if those voters were Republicans or Democrats, he simply wanted everyone to have a voice in our government. Of all of my father's admirable qualities, that pure love of people and their well-being was his greatest.

One of those people was Elaine Skolnik, icon of this paper, who also died early this month. Elaine, her husband Al Skolnik, and their colleagues have chronicled an archive of lives well led in their beloved Greenbelt, including those of my parents, Jerry and Kathy. Mrs. Skolnik was a respected friend, and the News Review was eagerly anticipated (and sometimes delivered) by our family.

In search of stories of my parents' lives, what a gift it was to find in the online archives of the News Review many stories of dedication – not only of my parents, but of a cadre of caring citizens who made Greenbelt the ideal place for us growing up. I found the City Council's early land use debates for Metro, Eleanor Roosevelt High School, and the maturation of the town we will always call home. Those dreams have been realized, and new ones are on the horizon. May Greenbelt always be beloved by people who care.

With gratitude,
Maureen (Gough) Decombe

"The Other Side of the Self"

Rev. Russ Savage, Interim Caretaker Minister; with Worship Associate Susannah Schiller

Each of us has a whole aspect of ourselves we hardly know. Sometimes it emerges when we are under stress or other unusual times. When it does, it may surprise and frighten us. Let us reflect on this unseen aspect of the self and how we might better know and understand it.

Connect Across Greenbelt

Those who would like to see Greenbelt better connected and forge paths to equity can join a conversation and creatively deepen their support with community connections. Connecting Across Greenbelt (CAG) is a group of residents who gather virtually to build relationships across neighborhoods and to understand current challenges for all Greenbelters. A multi-cultural, multi-racial and multi-generational group of Greenbelters, CAG is working to enhance quality of life through connections and relationships. To research ways to cope in these difficult times, the group is building a Caring and Connecting Toolkit (bit.ly/CAGtoolkit) in association with leading mental health and community health leaders. Ideas are welcome.

The group's next meeting is Monday, February 22, and the topic will be yoga nidra and mindfulness. For more information, email communityconnections@gmail.com.

Council, Legislators Discuss Covid Relief, Roads, and More

by Kathleen Gallagher

Back in the olden days before Covid-19, the Greenbelt City Council held two dinner meetings during the time of the Maryland General Assembly each year. The first meeting, where councilmembers presented the city's legislative priorities to its representatives, was held in Greenbelt prior to the opening of the session. The second meeting, where the delegation updated city officials on how the session was going, was held in Annapolis.

On January 6, this year's preliminary meeting was held on Zoom. In addition to all the members of the city council, the following were present: State Senator Paul Pinsky; State Delegates Anne Healey, Alonzo Washington and Nicole Williams; and County Councilmember Todd Turner.

The city presented an exceptionally long list of priorities this year, including Coronavirus Relief Funding; Greenbelt Road Streetscape Improvements; Greenbelt Metro Station Improvements; Statewide Police Reform; Opposing the Bureau of Engraving and Printing Facility at BARC; Blocking the Maglev Train Routes Through Greenbelt and Prince George's County; Opposing Transfer and Potential Privatization of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway; and Opposing Beltway Widening.

CARES Money

Mayor Colin Byrd thanked Turner for extending some of the federal CARES money to municipalities this year. He also asked whether, given that the federal government had not provided enough support for fighting the coronavirus, the state might provide additional help to the county. Pinsky replied that on the federal level the Democrats had included much more in their proposal to support both state and local government, but unfortunately that was not funded. He said there is hope for additional support with President Joe Biden now in office, but otherwise he had to be honest in saying that assistance for local government – which includes both county and municipal – has not been a top priority. He added that a long queue has formed for funding.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts asked about the status of legislation to protect renters from eviction. He said there seem to be too many holes in the federal legislation, and he hopes the state will take some action. Pinsky replied that this is clearly one of the big issues.

Byrd asked about locations for administering vaccines other than the Wayne Curry Sports and Learning Center. Turner replied that as more eligible groups come online and increase the overall number of people seeking vaccine, additional sites will be added. Turner emphasized that it will be important to manage expectations, in the sense that at this point time frames are running through June. He also stressed the role elected officials need to play in encouraging people to be vaccinated.

Councilmember Emmett Jordan noted that there has been a lot of emphasis on renters and evictions but not much on homeowners, homeowner associations (HOAs) and mortgage foreclosures. Turner replied that the problem with that is that the funding the county receives is earmarked for rental. He added that this is a topic that they need to discuss with their federal partners to provide more flexibility. Jordan said it will be "devastating" if there is a run of mortgage foreclosures when funding runs out in March.

Pinsky pointed out that, unlike the federal government, the General Assembly can spend only what it gets. "Unlike the federal government," he said, "we cannot print money."

Councilmember Edward Putens backed up what Jordan had said about homeowners also needing support. "That is my priority," he said, noting that the city's taxes will come due in July, and deficits there will have a big impact on everyone. Increasingly, he said, it is the case that people are not working and cannot pay their HOA fees or their mortgages and taxes. He stressed that this needs attention now and that "we cannot be having people's homes taken away."

Homeowner Bills

Williams pointed out that there are some homeowner bills being sponsored, and Washington encouraged people to get involved and comment on what is proposed. He said this year's legislative session will be much more transparent than most because so much of it will be on Zoom rather than Webex. He encouraged people to be actively engaged in what is going on.

Byrd expressed concern over what he had heard will be lower limits on the numbers of speakers who can testify on bills this session. Pinsky reminded him that they had been unable to finish the session last year because of the coronavirus. This year they are trying to make plans to get through the whole session. Since they cannot limit the number of bills submitted, all they can do to control time is to limit testimony.

"The goal is to give every bill some time but not indefinite time," Pinsky said. "We had to do limits even though there will be some disappointments."

For the most part, the remainder of the meeting comprised a relatively brief discussion of the status of various items. Jordan asked what to expect from the sports betting bill that passed by a wide margin in the fall election. Washington said the bill itself needed a good bit of work to assure it would accomplish what was intended, including that the proceeds go to support education. Turner added that there might be a little money from it this year. Healey said it is a priority of the delegation.

Regarding the last three items on the city's list (Maglev, B-W Parkway and widening of the Beltway) Pinsky said they support the city's opposition to all three.

Washington said he supports the city's positions in being anti-Maglev and supportive of improvements to the Greenbelt Metro Station.

Roberts also asked about the planned relocation of the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing to land on the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC). It appeared that the delegation was also supportive of the city's opposition toward that project, but Turner indicated that although he had written to object to certain environmental issues, he wanted the city to understand that he was not objecting across the board.

Council Contributes to Peters, Covid-19 Worksession Slated

by Cathie Meetre

A contribution to the fund for Corporal Chris Peters who died on January 14 (see story in last week's paper) was unanimously supported by the Greenbelt City Council at their January 11 meeting. At the time of the meeting, the officer, injured in the line of duty, was still hospitalized in critical condition. With broad support, Mayor Colin Byrd suggested that the contribution should be direct (not through an online intermediary) while Councilmember Rodney Roberts proposed increasing it to $2,500 – with unanimous agreement. Councilmember Judith Davis, though voting in favor of the motion, was concerned about setting a precedent and asked Assistant City Manager David Moran to research whether the city has previously made such donations. Council also supported the purchase of lightweight Kevlar helmets for the police.

Covid-19 Assistance

Council was united that additional action needed to be taken to assist residents struggling with the effects of Covid-19 on their life in responding to an agenda item proposed by Byrd. Davis suggested that a worksession would be the best way to handle the details of an agenda item outlining a proposed Covid-19 relief package. Councilmembers Emmett Jordan and Silke Pope were both concerned that insufficient information was known about the city's financial situation to assume that there would really be $1.3M available and expressed apprehension about committing that sum of money at this time, with the new city budget not being available for consideration until March. Jordan pointed out that the $1.3M was not a surplus, but a projection of the margin between how the city had actually done and the pessimistic assumptions reached earlier. Both councilmembers were concerned that something could happen to shrink the available funds.

Councilmember Edward Putens asked how much financial assistance remains presently and Dr. Elizabeth Parks of Greenbelt CARES said that the remaining approximately $10K was essentially already committed to applications and that all federal funds had been disbursed, as was required. Putens expressed concern about mortgagees and homeowners. He pointed out that a significant fraction of mortgage payments are property taxes escrowed by lenders ($8K to $11K for some homes) and suggested considering reducing the tax burden for those who have lost employment.

Byrd assured Putens that the discussion would include both renters and homeowners and emphasized the urgent need to get something moving before February. Davis suggested January 27 for a worksession on the topic and Byrd asked staff to provide definitions, financial information and other background for the items described in the agenda item to assist in discussion. At the suggestion of Councilmember Leta Mach, the assistance and housing topics on the agenda were referred to the same worksession.

Greenbelt West Board

A proposal submitted by Byrd to implement a Greenbelt West Advisory Board launched council into sometimes strained discussions involving the complexities of potential lingering institutional racism in the city, the at-large form of representation in council and the differing provision of and access to city resources by geographic area. (Note: Four members of council live in Greenbelt East, three in the core and none in Greenbelt West and there is minimal or no participation on city boards by Greenbelt West residents).

Byrd raised the lack of representation on council and on city boards by residents of Greenbelt West. Councilmembers were also concerned about this but Davis pointed out that there are openings on most city boards which would welcome applicants from Greenbelt West, but that no such applications have been received. She alluded, however, to the city's Advisory Planning Board which she described as "very popular" in that there are usually more applicants than positions. Davis noted that a recent Greenbelt West applicant for a spot on the planning board was eventually not accepted because they failed to complete the requirements for the position, despite every encouragement and being accorded a significant length of time to complete them.

Roberts noted that no mission or other background was provided for consideration and also pointed out that with major development

Greenbelt West projects on the drawing board, for example the redevelopment of Beltway Plaza, the lack of representation from the west side of the city was particularly notable.

A Transient Population?

Byrd said that he didn't accept that transience in the population of Greenbelt West (Franklin Park in particular) was the reason for the dearth of representation, stating that there were many long-term Franklin Park residents. (Editor's note: Statistics provided for 2019 indicate that a typical turnover rate for such a complex would be 40 to 42 percent annually and that the average renter stays for 27 months, though significantly shorter or longer periods occur.)

Byrd also complained that many representatives on boards and on council had been there "20 or even 40 years" and that he thought there should be term limits. This idea failed to resonate with council, some of whom have served for decades.

Council's interactions on the topic included some contention. At one point, Davis, while nodding her head up and down, stated that she thought the mayor expected council to be like bobbleheads saying yes to everything he proposed. The mayor responded that personal attacks were inappropriate.

Resident Associations

Councilmembers recommended that community leaders implement resident associations to focus concerns and create a

My Covid-19 Shot

A Prince George's County Vaccination Experience

by Robin Olson

I was one of the lucky ones able to sign up on January 16 through the Maryland State website for a Covid-19 vaccine on Monday, January 25 at the Prince George's Sports and Learning Complex. I had signed up for Maryland alerts as Governor Larry Hogan suggested and was sent a link. Due to a programming error, the site was open to anyone in Maryland, not just Prince George's County as originally intended. Thanks, apparently, to Mayor Colin Byrd's letter to County Executive Angela Alsobrooks, those who were non-residents were cancelled starting January 25, not February 9 as first reported. Those registered were notified by email of the new policy and out-of-county residents were cancelled and told not to come.

My appointment was honored as I am a Greenbelt resident in group 1C in line with the state and county guidelines. Thanks again to Byrd for troubleshooting for me on Sunday with the Health Department that I was still confirmed due to an ambiguous email I received a few hours after my reminder for the appointment the next day.

The staff ran a professional and efficient operation. No lining up until 10 minutes before your time. I was in and out within one hour including a delay due to the computers crashing and the 15 minutes you must wait after the injection. The second dose appointment is set up before you leave. My arm is a little sore and stiff at injection site but no other effects.

Fate of Most in Need

Trolling for websites to sign up for is an option open only to those who can handle online activities; the vaccination system is passive on the part of the organizations, who don't reach out to the public but wait for individuals to sign up. As a result, some individuals are signed up at several sites and the most vulnerable older people, who may lack the computer capability, at none.

Vaccination HMO Style

An interesting contrast is Kaiser Permanente's Covid-19 operation. Kaiser is a health maintenance organization (HMO) and all its patients are automatically registered and proactively informed as they become eligible and appointments are available – there's not the free-for-all evident in the overall approach. Recent experience with them shows, for example, that a drive-through Covid-19 test can be scheduled online the same day – with the results delivered automatically by email only eight hours later. An HMO more closely resembles the centralized health delivery systems found in almost all first-world and some second-world countries.

Sylvia Lewis (News Review board member and display ads coordinator) recently received her first shot at a local Kaiser facility, and said she was very impressed with the process. She had made an appointment for her husband, Robert, for Friday, January 22 at the Kaiser Largo location but in trying to make hers, she tangled unsuccessfully with the website. Immediately after she had made Robert's appointment, she received a phone call from Kaiser (as Lewis remarks, "by a real person") who made a Saturday appointment for Sylvia.

When Lewis took her husband on January 22, the whole procedure – registering, getting the shot and waiting 15 minutes to see if there was a reaction – took one hour. It wasn't quite as smooth for her shot on Saturday because more people were waiting, so it took 30 minutes to get to registration and then a longer wait to get the shot and the mandatory 15-minute wait. Nonetheless, it was still only two hours altogether. She notes that her only reaction to the shot was a nice long nap.

Another News Review member is also a Kaiser patient whose call came Saturday, January 23. She is 78 and the Lewises are in their 80s, so Kaiser is apparently systematically working through its patient base from higher to lower ages and considering health status. Because Kaiser has all the medical records of its patients' care and vulnerabilities and reaches out to its patients deliberately, there are no requirements that its members apply, register or fill out any forms. They just check in.

Future Gains

It is apparent that the pace of vaccinations will pick up as more outlets start dispensing. (In Seattle, Starbucks coffee shops are part of the network of vaccination centers.) Some major grocery chains and pharmacies are also scheduled to start dispensing vaccinations by the end of the month. Older and most vulnerable Greenbelters are perceptibly beginning to receive shots and the trend is slowly moving in the right direction.

Meanwhile, in Greenbelt let's all mask up and stay out of harm's way.

News Review readers are invited to contribute short accounts of their vaccination adventures, positive and negative (not all may be printed). Send them to editor@greenbeltnewsreview.com and, if including a photograph, make sure to attach and not embed it, state who took the photo and give names for who is pictured in it. The newspaper doesn't need (or want!) to know personal health details.

The Science Olympiad is a virtual competition applying STEM (science, technology, engineering and mathematics) education to real-world problems. Destination Imagination competitions combine science and engineering challenges with artistic expression. The third ERHS grant will start a competitive intramural eSports league within the school to encourage teamwork and socializing within the virtual environment.

Magnolia Elementary School will receive a grant to purchase math manipulatives that will be distributed to the students to use at home in independent assignments. The manipulatives include number blocks, fraction strips and plastic coins, helping the students to visualize addition, subtraction and the relations between numbers.

Springhill Lake Elementary School won a grant to support their Positive Behavior Intervention and Support (PBIS) program, which provides incentives and rewards for good behavior. Normally the PBIS program is supported by fundraisers such as movie nights, winter fun nights and the Spring Fest. As those programs are not possible this year, the PBIS rewards will be supported by an ACE grant.

Greenbelt Elementary School (GES) put in a lot of strong proposals this year and was awarded 12 grants. The school also recognized the need for math manipulatives that students could have at home, and there were four grants to support different classes. To enhance individual instruction, four grants will support a variety of games and materials for the talented and gifted program, STEM books, and reading and math software.

GES also received grants to purchase a set of badminton equipment for gym classes and flexible furniture for the school's mindfulness space. The only teacher development ACE grant this year will fund attendance at the virtual Maryland State Talented and Gifted Conference.

There was a grant proposal from the GES Parent Teacher Association to address food insecurity issues at the school caused by the pandemic and resulting economic crisis by creating an emergency food bank at the school. Although this does not fit within the scope of the ACE grants program, the ACE committee recommended that council allocate $600 to each of the six ACE schools to address the emergency, due to the extremely unusual circumstances of this pandemic year. The money will be allocated and managed by Greenbelt CARES, which has agreed to work with the schools.

This is the twelfth year that Greenbelt has distributed ACE grants to the local schools; in total there have been 238 proposals funded at a total cost of $108,000. ACE's recommendations were approved by the city council with a unanimous vote, and members expressed appreciation for the efforts that ACE put into reviewing the grant proposals.

concerted voice for their community and expressed concern that a board tied to a particular area would set a divisive precedent. Putens gave the Greenbelt East Advisory Coalition (GEAC) as an example of a grassroots organization that represents the views of Greenbelt East residents effectively without being council's instrument. Putens suggested that Franklin Park could base such an association on its original nine neighborhoods but the mayor did not appear to be persuaded by this potential strategy.

The motion to implement a Greenbelt West Advisory Board did not come to a vote, being withdrawn by the mayor before being seconded, although Roberts had offered to do so.

Greenbelt Road

Neighboring jurisdictions Berwyn Heights and College Park have requested that Greenbelt join in a working group to thrash out the future of Greenbelt Road. Jordan and Davis volunteered their assistance. Resident William Orleans requested that such meetings should be open and transparent and the mayor and Putens both echoed that interest.

Butterflies and Finances

Council referred to GreenACES an initiative regarding a monarch butterfly joint venture and approved retaining Davenport and Company LLC to perform a comprehensive financial review of the city's finances, subject to a not-to-exceed amount that is to be agreed upon.

Participate in Democracy

Residents have the opportunity to participate in their local government by watching this three-and-a-half-hour council meeting. The video and agenda package, as for all council meetings and worksessions, is available on the city website at greenbeltmd.gov/government/city-council/minutes-and-agendas. Instructions and links for watching or participating in council meetings are contained in the first page of each agenda.

Roberts said the problem is that both the county and the state are supporting Maglev. He said what he hopes for from the delegation is not just agreement with the city but letters and action. He wants the delegation and the county to look more closely at the impacts of these projects and to contact U.S. Representative Steny Hoyer. Roberts said all of the road and transportation projects the city is opposing would impact the Beaver Dam Creek environmental area and that protecting BARC is essential to stopping Maglev.

At this point, there seemed to be agreement on one other issue: that it was time to go find some dinner.

Quilts, Puppet Show, Short Films on Sunday Afternoon

The Greenbelt Recreation Arts Program welcomes visitors of all ages to an online Artful Afternoon on Sunday, February 7, 2 to 4 p.m. For links and a free materials kit while supplies last, sign up in advance at: <https://bit.ly/2JRZGnY>. This event is provided as part of Greenbelt's Black History Month celebration.

At 2 p.m. join Greenbelt artist and educator Barbara Joann Combs on Zoom for a paper quilt workshop. Make a panel suitable for framing – or create a more complex work of art incorporating panels from multiple household members. This activity takes inspiration from the vibrant designs of Alabama's celebrated "Gee's Bend" quilters, challenging participants to create unique patterns based on observations of their own surroundings. A multimedia activity guide will be provided, including project instructions and links to videos about historical and contemporary African American quilters working in both abstract and pictorial styles.

At 3 p.m. enjoy a free puppetry showcase. The show will premiere on YouTube, and will be followed by a live post-show Zoom meet-up with the puppeteers. Links will be emailed to all guests who pre-register for the Artful Afternoon. The program will include four short films, suitable for adults as well as children. Fellow Marylander Schroeder Cherry will present The Children's Crusade; a grandfather shares his memories of the role played by children in Civil Rights Movement demonstrations. Day of Service Volunteers Learn About Beavers and Protect Trees

by Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll

On Monday, January 18, tree protection in Buddy Attick Park was the main focus of Greenbelt's Martin Luther King, Jr. National Day of Service. The "Co-Existing with Beavers" volunteer workday, sponsored by the City of Greenbelt Department of Public Works, helped community members learn about beavers, invasive vines and protecting trees from both.

Volunteers assembled around 10 a.m. at the cove on the south side of the lake where Public Works Environmental Coordinator Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll gave a brief introduction to the group and educated the volunteers about beavers, their importance to the ecosystem and the importance of protecting critical native trees. The group used wire caging to encircle native trees to discourage beavers from chewing their trunks. Large trees close to the walking trail were targeted for caging while small trees were left uncaged. This prevents beavers from felling large trees, which can pose a public safety problem, while leaving the smaller trees for beavers to chew on. This allows a safe coexistence with the beavers at Buddy Attick Park.

Staff also instructed volunteers on how to identify English ivy and Japanese honeysuckle and how to safely remove it from trees, protecting them from being over-shaded or girdled by the invasive vines.

Twenty-five spirited volunteers successfully caged approximately 60 trees, removed several yards of invasive vines and totaled 75 hours of community service, all while practicing good social distancing to make this event as safe as possible for everyone.

The day of service in honor of Dr. King was well observed in Greenbelt this year, as this event brought together people of all ages, backgrounds and abilities and as Dr. King famously said, "Everyone can be great because everyone can serve." The next day of service will be in observance of Presidents' Day on Monday, February 15. Details can be found on the City of Greenbelt website: greenbeltmd.gov/government/departments-con-t/public-works/green-volunteer-opportunities.

Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll is the environmental coordinator for the City of Greenbelt.
