Greenbelter Gets to Be Extra In Upcoming Film on Slavery

by Kyla Hanington

“There are three rules to being an extra in a movie,” my brother, an experienced extra, told me. “Overact in the background, look directly at the camera and get between the camera and the main action as often as possible.”

I was on my way to Wilmington, N.C., where my daughter Anja, an Eleanor Roosevelt High School graduate, is working on the feature-length documentary, Hope of Escape. Its website announces that the movie tells “the story of Diana Williams, her daughter Cornelia and her daughter’s sweetheart William, as they plan their emancipation from slavery.” While that is a concise summary, it can’t convey the richness of the film and the story that it tells. I have been hearing some of these stories for over a year, as Anja is the production coordinator and sound assistant for the film. The filmmaker, Amy Gerber-Stroh, was Anja’s thesis director for her undergraduate degree in film from Hollins University and is a direct descendant of Diana and Cornelia. The resilience and the power of Amy’s ancestors were

Council FOP Contract Vote Delayed by Process Shortfalls

by Cathie Meetre

The Greenbelt City Council meeting of July 12 resounded with complaints about administrative failures relating to the meeting and its content and interfering with the ability to complete crucial agenda items. Resident Lore Rosenthal pointed out errors in meeting links that might be preventing citizens from attending the Zoom meeting and councilmembers griped about late or unavailable documents. Complaints were made that the action on the Fraternal Order of Police (FOP) contract was mislabeled as a resolution when it was not (a resolution requires first and second readings). The upshot was that the vote on the four-year collective bargaining agreement (CBA) between the city and the FOP was delayed to August, despite what appeared to be council-wide agreement on its provisions.

Councilmember Judith Davis referred to “sloppy administration” because of delay in getting materials to council and brought up the misuse of the word “resolution” in the agenda. Later in the meeting she focused on these shortcomings, stating that, though council had undoubtedly caused its share of problems in other cases, the CBA issue was not the fault of council and that she hoped the FOP would understand.

Greenbelt Is Behind

In describing the provisions of the new agreement, City Solicitor Steve Silvestri, who negotiated on behalf of the city, said that Greenbelt’s police department is one of the lower-paid among local jurisdictions, making it harder to recruit new early-career and more-experienced police officers. “We have fallen behind,” he said, with officers up to three steps below (later corrected by FOP Counsel Patrick McAndrew to up to seven steps or approximately 20 percent of salary) where they would have been had council funded those steps annually.

New Voting Method Joins Old Ones for 2021 City Election

by Kathleen Gallagher

Este artículo está disponible en español en nuestra página web www.greenbeltnewsreview.com.

It isn’t often that Greenbelt adopts new methods for voting in city elections, but the repertoire has increased slowly but surely over the years. Following paper ballots was a long period of lever machines, followed by other machines. Then voting times were expanded to make it easier for residents to vote and over the years early voting has expanded with both weekday and weekend hours.

What’s New?

Those who have been following city council legislation are already aware that Greenbelt has followed in the steps of Mary-land’s very successful introduction of voting by mail during the primary elections last year. Other residents may have been surprised to receive a Vote by Mail postcard recently that announces the beginning of the program with the upcoming City Council Election on November 2.

How Does It Work?

One important aspect of the program is that it will absorb what was previously known as Absentee Voting. Residents who previously requested an Absentee Ballot should request a Vote by Mail ballot instead.

Although all registered voters will receive applications to request mail ballots if they wish,

PSAC Report to City Council Argues for Some Limited Reform

by Matthew Arbach

On July 12, members of the Public Safety Advisory Committee (PSAC) met with the Greenbelt City Council to present their May 5 report on Mayor Colin Byrd’s Fair and Just Policing Act. PSAC analyzed the proposed legislation, in comparison to the existing General Orders of the Greenbelt Police Department (GPD) and the recent April 2021 state legislation on policing, along with GPD operations records and reports to the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies (CALEA) and standards of the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP).

PSAC recommended that such an ordinance would not be necessary, as the General Orders and state legislation already address most of what Byrd is pressing for. PSAC did find, however, that there were areas in police policies and the organization itself that were troubling and required scrutiny as well as modification of the General Orders. Greenbelt Police Chief Richard Bowers added that an ordinance would be more difficult to alter than General Orders, which are easily changed or amended (as they are on a regular basis) to fit the current situation, a point concurred with by PSAC.

Byrd countered that the lack of an ordinance sent the message that police “are above the law,” and that it was possible for the

My Point of View

Re-using Plastic Bags Goes to the Dogs

by Melissa Sites

Greenbelt's dog walkers have come up with a wonderful cooperative and community-based re-use system for old plastic bags. Many dog walkers know that moment – when you realize you forgot the little bags you need for picking up your dog's poo. Some residents have installed stations along our walking paths where thoughtful donors leave small plastic bags for re-use. The most favored bags for this type of re-use are the ones newspapers are stuffed into for delivery. Produce bags also work well. Almost any small bag – as long as it's not perforated – will do.

The Companion Animal Committee helps provide recycled bags for companionable poop.

Recently I ordered a 13" pizza pan, along with a 9" x 12" baking pan and a silicon spatula. Imagine my chagrin when the pans arrived in a box about four feet long and nearly two feet wide! The box was stuffed full of more than 30 plastic packing pillows to keep those three items from sliding around in there – a veritable ocean of plastic! But one great way to re-use packing pillows is as dog poo bags. So I sat down with my scissors and tore apart the long strips of pillows, opening each pillow along one end with my scissors to make a bag. These bags are big enough for my hand to fit inside, and are bigger than needed to hold a sandwich. (Smaller packing pillows can be reused in place of snack-size baggies.)

After separating and opening all the pillows, I had reduced the total volume from that huge box into one rolled up handful of poo bags. I then distributed them around to four different poo bag baskets along my morning walk. Thanks, Greenbelt, for your amazing dedication to reuse and community cooperation.

P.S. I did not keep the poo bags myself, because I pick up my dog's poo with a tissue, place it in a bag-lined plastic container (a cocoa powder box!) and carry it home to flush – reducing my bag use to about one a month. To pick up each poo in its own bag would use over 1,000 plastic bags a year.

Corrections

In our story about Sylvia Lewis, the 2011 Outstanding Citizen, in last week's paper the email address to submit nominations for this year's Outstanding Citizen was off by one letter. The correct address (as shown on the nomination form) is outstandingcitizengb@gmail.com.

The News Review added an extraneous letter to the name of one of our correspondents in the July 8 Letters column: his name is Robin Hawley Gorsline. We regret the error.

A donation box for sneakers is located outside the Fellowship Center, the small building behind the church, for people to drop off sneakers at any time.

Time Bank Sees Post Covid Uptick

After a dip in activities due to the pandemic, the Greenbelt Time Bank is starting to see an increase in requests and offers placed by members. This raises the question, what chores or talents have individuals put off requesting or offering during the pandemic?

The top exchanges made through the Time Bank from April through June 2021 were gardening, yard work, transportation and arts and crafts. There were also multiple offers or requests for legal advice, cooking, construction and home repair.

There are many easy-to-do activities that have been deferred during the pandemic. Some tasks represent easy ways to earn or spend Time Bank hours. Pet sitting or dog walking, computer work, a bicycle in need of service, shopping for the home-bound, decluttering or cleaning out a garage or attic space are among the tasks that individuals can offer or request through the Time Bank in addition to those mentioned above.

For members of the group, it is only a matter of placing a request or offer to the other members on the website. The Time Bank works on the simple premise of neighbors helping neighbors through an exchange of services. Training and an orientation are provided to all new members.

An orientation session will be scheduled soon, so anyone interested in becoming a member can register at GreenbeltTimeBank.org. For interested individuals with questions, email Greenbelt.Timebank@gmail.com or call 240-473-3497 and leave a message.

The group's next event is a Forum on Public Safety to be held Thursday, July 22 at 7 p.m. on Zoom. Join in to hear from a panel of neighbors about what makes them feel safe or unsafe in Greenbelt.

CAG is a multi-cultural, multi-racial and multi-generational group of residents who gather virtually to build relationships across neighborhoods and to learn about current challenges of Greenbelters. The group is building multiple resources. The first is research-tested coping strategies for self-care and stress management called Caring and Connecting Toolkit (bit.ly/CAGtoolkit).

Greenbelt Volunteers Help With Reading for the Blind

by Glenn Harris

Greenbelter Kathie Jarva and this reporter are volunteers at the Metropolitan Washington Ear (MWE), a radio, reading and information service for the blind, visually impaired and those who can no longer physically handle printed materials. Dr. Margaret Pfanstiehl, who was herself a blind person, started MWE in 1974. It's called The Ear because, for the subscribers, it allows the ear to hear what the eye is unable to see. Services include reading and recording of newspapers and periodicals, audio descriptions of selected theater performances and on-call look-up services. Their website is washear.org.

MWE volunteers read and record publications so that subscribers can listen, free, via special radios or the telephone dial-in service. The radio broadcasts are done in conjunction with WETA; Minnesota Public Radio provides the overnight radio programming. MWE volunteers read and record seven days a week. Volunteers also enable subscribers to attend in-person performances at venues such as the Olney Theater, where the volunteer narrates the performance to the listener in real time. The look-up service allows subscribers to call MWE with specific questions on almost any topic, and a volunteer will look up the answer for the subscriber.

Jarva has been an MWE volunteer reader since about 1994. While an exchange student in Finland, she resided with a family whose father was blind. This influenced her decision to become a volunteer reader. She is a retiree from the Goddard Space Flight Center where she was a resource manager for the facilities operations at the Greenbelt campus.

Harris was an assistant program manager for the parts and supplies distribution operation at Goddard. After retirement, he became a volunteer at MWE in 2008 because his mother had low vision in her later years. Another volunteer from Greenbelt has been unable to read because of the pandemic but will likely resume later this year.

MWE services are free to subscribers. The organization is funded through grants, donations and appropriations from Washington-area government agencies. The City of Greenbelt has provided an annual appropriation to MWE for many years. The organization was chosen by the Catalogue for Philanthropy as "one of the best small charities in the Washington, D.C., region."

To support MWE, designate Metropolitan Washington Ear at Smile.Amazon and the organization will receive a portion of each purchase.

Daily and weekly newspapers and publications are available, including The Washington Post, Washington Times, Wall Street Journal, USA Today and local publications such as the Greenbelt News Review and the Capital Gazette. Jarva specializes in reading the daily TV listings. Harris reads the Washington Post radio program on Mondays, and he also reads the News Review on Thursdays for the dial-in service.

Since March 2020, the Silver Spring studios have been closed to volunteers and all reading has been done from volunteers' homes. The MWE staff hopes to reopen the offices later this year. Volunteers are always needed, so there is often the option of reading from home in non-pandemic times.

Computer software that converts text to speech is continually improving and could be helpful to the blind and visually impaired. For example, IBM's Watson does an impressive job of converting text to nuanced speech. Future technology may allow organizations like MWE to make more publications available to subscribers without needing additional volunteer labor. However, for the immediate future, a skilled reader always sounds better and is more adaptable than any computer. As a result, MWE and its volunteers will continue to provide the blind and visually impaired with windows to the world.

Vax Scholarships

In an effort to encourage all Marylanders to protect themselves from Covid-19, the Maryland Higher Education Commission and the Maryland Department of Health (MDH) have set up a $1 million VaxU Scholarship Promotion fund for vaccinated residents ages 12 to 17 which provides a chance to win a college scholarship. The state is offering up to 20 scholarships around Maryland during nine statewide drawings. Those who win will receive a $50,000 scholarship through a Prepaid College Trust or a College Investment Plan from the Maryland 529 plans. The funds will go toward covering the cost of tuition and fees for a four-year college or university. Students who have a registered Maryland address at the time of their vaccination and who get vaccinated in Maryland (not at federal locations) will be automatically entered in the promotion for a chance to win.

Two winners will be selected each week on Mondays until September 6. On this, the last draw date, four winners will be selected. MDH will run the drawings, and every week a random generator will decide prize winners. Alternate winners will be selected in case original winners do not accept the prizes, are deemed ineligible or do not produce all necessary documentation and information to be validated as eligible.

For more information on eligibility and the promotion, visit the Maryland Higher VaxU Scholarship Promotion website. For all questions, email VaxUScholarship.mhec@maryland.gov.

while on a bridge, when what should appear in the water below me but an alligator. Giddy with delight, I took pictures and texted everyone I knew. In general, the conversations went like this:

Me: I saw an alligator.

My boss: Do not pet it.

My boss: Do not get in the water with it.

My boss: YOU ARE NOT ALLOWED TO BRING IT HOME.

I have never felt so seen.

High off my encounter with an alligator in the wild, I arrived at the Poplar Plantation in Wilmington where that day's shooting was taking place. Anja operated the boom-mic and was running sound for the day, and I hung out with the other extras and took pictures behind the scenes. I got to be an extra in two different scenes, and after the first one I decided to change the entire course of my life.

"Do you think there are many roles out there for fat, middle-aged, white women?" I asked some crew members over lunch. "I can hold still. Like, I could definitely play dead."

Said crew member number one, "That's hard to do well."

"No, I can definitely do that,"

I said, and I closed my eyes and stuck out my tongue to prove my point.

"Wow," said crew member number two. "That is pretty good. I am going to another film shoot tomorrow and I will ask them if they need a dead body."

"That'd be fantastic!"

"It's a Hallmark movie."

"They'll definitely need a dead body."

To be an extra is to wait around for five hours to do a five-minute shoot and that was in some ways my experience. Except it was much richer than that. I got to know the tremendously skilled Mizan Kirby-Nunes, who plays Diana in the film. I saw how hard Anja and the other crew members worked on set – managing scenes, managing equipment and managing people. The female-led film brings together top talent from New York, Virginia, Maryland, California and points between with Director Gerber-Stroh and her daughter, First Assistant Director Pippa Gerber-Stroh, setting the tone not only of the entire film but of the work experience – patient, encouraging and unflappable.

I recently talked to author Ken Woodley about his book The Road to Healing: A Civil Rights Reparations Story in Prince Edward County, Virginia. He said, "The founding fathers of 1776 ... they didn't get the job done, they didn't believe the words they wrote .... We all need to recognize that all of us are founding mothers and fathers, the founding of this nation truly continues."

Hope of Escape tells the story of two of the founding mothers of this nation, their work and the founding of the nation that continues with the lives and efforts of the filmmakers.

Maybe I forgot the acting lessons my brother gave me as I drove to North Carolina. What he forgot was to tell me how invested I would become, how a little bit in love with everyone and everything on the set I would feel and how riveted I was by the story. Like so many, I eagerly anticipate Hope of Escape's release, when I can see Diana and Yep, Kyla definitely saw an alligator.

Cornelia and their stories come to life and have this critical part of our collective history told more fully by these powerful, world-changing voices.

16th-century Play at GAC Portrays Same-sex Marriage

The Rude Mechanicals, in residence at Greenbelt Arts Center, are celebrating their 22nd anniversary with John Lyly's Gallathea, presented live online on Saturday, July 24 at 8 p.m. Written in 1588, and one of the most subversive comedies to have emerged in the last 2,400 years or so, Gallathea features a same-sex, gender-fluid relationship that multiple gods and a whole village get behind and support, and it ends happily, with a marriage.

Gallathea had a profound influence on Shakespeare, giving the Bard ideas, plot points, linguistic style, even a few lines plagiarized here and there. Shakespeare clearly loved this play.

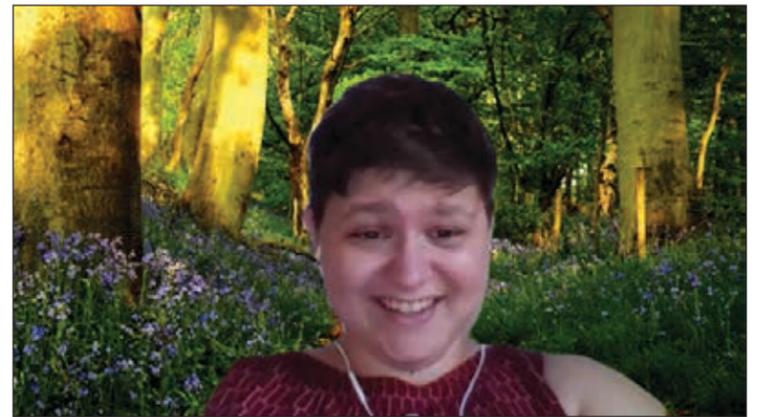

Every five years, in the village of Lincolnshire, Neptune demands the sacrifice of the village's most beautiful virgin. Gallathea and Phillida are beautiful Lincolnshire virgins, and it's about that time. So their fathers disguise them as boys and send them off to the woods to hide. The cross-dressed virgins meet and, unexpectedly, they fall in love. Then several woodland nymphs fall in love with one or both of them. And a few gods fall in love with each other. A dodecahedron of love is all around, irrespective of gender or species.

Lyly's treatment of the women is sympathetic and fiercely modern in interesting ways; Gallathea and Phillida fall genuinely in "unspotted" love, a love that does not alter when it alteration finds. Each of them sees and knows that she is in love with another woman, and neither one pulls back. The goddess Venus comes up with a heteronormative plan to make one of them a man, but never decides which, and at the end of the play, the two women are joyfully led off by their families, friends, neighbors and deities to be married.

Director Jaki Demarest commented, "We like to think it's happily ever after."

During Covid-19, the Greenbelt Arts Center is bringing online productions of important works to the residents of Greenbelt and the surrounding area. There is a suggested donation for viewing the show, which will support both the Greenbelt Arts Center and The Rude Mechanicals. For more information and to watch the play, visit greenbeltartscenter.org.

Rosenthal, Hartman Honored To Be 2019 Outstanding Citizens

by Lois Rosado

With the exception of 2020, an Outstanding Citizen of Greenbelt has been selected every year since 1973. The Covid-19 pandemic forced a cancellation of Greenbelt's 2020 Labor Day Festival and its many activities. This year, plans are underway for holding modified events and a public ceremony for the 2021 Outstanding Citizen. Individuals nominated have provided exemplary volunteer service enhancing the quality of life of this remarkable town. Who will join this illustrious group this year?

Lore Rosenthal and Michael Hartman were the 2019 Outstanding Citizens. When asked how they were enticed to attend the 2019 Opening Ceremony when the Outstanding Citizen Award was presented, Lore and Michael stated that, "Two friends independent of one another, asked us for a listing of our volunteer activities. Another friend asked us to have dinner with her and watch the ceremonies together. We suspected something was up. When the announcement came, our suspicions were confirmed!" They learned later that their friends had actually collaborated in nominating them. The committee noted the number of supportive signatures and documentation included in their nomination.

Rosenthal and Hartman were overwhelmed and deeply moved by the nomination and selection. They were surprised that their volunteer efforts were recognized and appreciated by residents of Greenbelt. "In Greenbelt, if you have a good idea, you can make it happen," said Rosenthal.

The two continue their numerous volunteer efforts and regularly attend Greenbelt City Council meetings to express their thoughts and ideas on various issues being deliberated. Hartman, as president of the New Deal Café, recently entered into a contract with the Greenbelt Co-op Supermarket to provide food services for the Café. He also serves on the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability (GreenACES), as well as supporting actions of the Greenbelt Climate Action Network (GCAN). He is a founding member of the Greenbelt Racial Equity Alliance (GREA) and supports the mayor's efforts with the Fair and Just Policing Act. Hartman also served on the Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) Reasonable Accommodation Policy Committee.

Rosenthal continues as the program coordinator of GCAN and is a volunteer presenter and five-session Action Team facilitator on Drawdown (climate solutions to reverse global warming). She actively works with the Prince George's County Sierra Club in monitoring the county's Draft Climate Action Plan and with GREA's eviction support project. This past year, Rosenthal got involved early with fundraising efforts as part of GHI's Covid-response fee-deferral program. This program was established by GHI to assist members who were delinquent in paying their co-op fees because of lost wages. The group was able to raise enough funds to help pay off fees for 2020-2021. Rosenthal and other GHI members are continuing this effort as the problem continues to persist for some GHI members. She is also involved with several proposals for composting projects in Greenbelt and in other nearby parts of Prince George's County.

With all that has occurred in the country and city over the past year, we asked Rosenthal and Hartman if they had experienced anything new or different since being selected as Outstanding Citizens. "As a result of George Floyd's death in 2020, we have doubled down in our fight for racial equity in the city" (police reform, eviction moratorium and easier access to city elections through mail-in ballots). They have also participated in multi-session workshops about understanding racism.

In closing, the busy couple suggested that instead of Outstanding Citizen, perhaps the award should be called Outstanding Resident, Outstanding Greenbelter or Greenbelter of the Year. The committee will certainly consider these suggestions.

Award 2021

The Outstanding Citizen award is bestowed annually during the opening ceremony of the Labor Day Festival. While a committee selects the Outstanding Citizen, that selection is made from nominations submitted by you, the residents of Greenbelt. If you submitted a nomination for someone previously, support that person again, be persistent and add as many support letters or signatures as you can. While only one person, or rarely two, is designated as Greenbelt's Outstanding Citizen, there is no doubt that every nominee has greatly contributed to the wonderful quality of life in Greenbelt. We encourage the nomination of youth and young adults who have gone beyond the call of duty and made a special impact on the Greenbelt community.

Submit a letter or the nomination form on this page by Monday, August 2 to Robert Zugby, chair, Outstanding Citizen Committee, 94 Ridge Road, Greenbelt, MD 20770 or email outstandingcitizengb@gmail.com.

In-person Retro Town Fair Will Return on Labor Day Weekend

by Sheila Maffay-Tuthill

After a lovely virtual Retro Town Fair last year, the Greenbelt Museum is excited to announce an in-person, all outdoors, 9th annual Retro Town Fair to be held on Sunday, September 5. It is time to plan entries, and share talents with neighbors and friends. Categories will be much the same including baking and canning, needlework and crafts. This is the place to show off a good-looking cucumber or tomato.

The Retro Town Fair will be in-person and outdoors this Labor Day.

Retro Town Fair began in 2012, the year of Greenbelt's 75th anniversary celebration. It is an homage to the early Town Fairs held in Greenbelt starting in the late 1930s. Gardening in Greenbelt was always a big deal – this city was green from the start! The Garden Club got things going, and a beloved event is now carried on.

More information and entry forms will be coming soon on the museum website, greenbeltmuseum.org, and to its social media. Email education@greenbeltmuseum.org if more information is needed.

Welcome to the Fair!

CBA Provisions

The agreement includes a 20-percent raise spread across four years and other changes in benefits, but these financial provisions seemed less of a concern to members of council than the language over the state Law Enforcement Officers Bill of Rights (LEOBR). The prior agreement with the FOP gave Greenbelt officers rights in addition to those granted by the state in the LEOBR but the new contract would not. The suggestion was made by Mayor Colin Byrd to remove any reference to the LEOBR from the contract as it was unnecessary to quote something that was legislated by the state and would automatically apply. Byrd made the point that state laws on, for example, carjacking, were not included in the agreement because they applied anyway and said that, similarly, there was no need to call out LEOBR specifically. Byrd also wanted to see the agreement itself as it would appear with the changes implemented.

CBA Benefits to City

Silvestri explained that the new agreement extends the term from three to four years to lock in the costs and create a longer window before a new agreement is needed. It also ties the restoration of missed steps to the generation of revenue. In terms of the recruitment of experienced officers, the new agreement allows a newly recruited but experienced officer to come in at a step more appropriate to their level of experience. Requirement for body cam usage and incentives for physical fitness are the other major changes – and apart from these few provisions, much of the contract remains as previously stated.

Silvestri indicated that a “tracked changes” version of the proposed contract would be available within the week following the council meeting as well as a version of the contract with the changes implemented.

FOP Disappointment

Despite Davis’ protestations of council’s innocence, McAndrew – speaking for the FOP – expressed his deep disappointment (and that of numerous other police-related individuals texting him in real time) about the delay in voting which, he felt, “sent a profoundly negative message” to city officers. He felt that the contract should be voted on and that any minor changes that were required could be tackled as a separate issue.

In the absence of a motion, no vote was taken and the mayor referred the matter to the next meeting.

voters will not be sent mail ballots unless they request them. As explained on the postcard, the application forms will be sent out later this summer. Those who do wish to vote by mail should complete the application for the ballot and send it back no later than Monday, September 27, in order to allow time for processing. The voted ballot can be returned by mail, and additional information will be provided on locations where ballots may be returned or dropped off.

While the form to request a ballot should be returned to the city no later than September 27, the deadline for registering to vote in the election is not until Monday, October 4. New voters should thus be aware that they may not be eligible to Vote by Mail this year if they wait too long to register.

Prince George’s County is strongly encouraging voting by mail as an ongoing precaution while the pandemic continues. It is not a requirement, however, and residents may choose to vote in person on Election Day and at early voting. More information will continue to be provided in this paper and will also be available on the city website at greenbeltmd.gov.

County Schools Offer Free Summer Meals

Prince George’s County Public Schools (PGCPS) is operating its annual Summer Food Service Program through Wednesday, August 18. Grab and Go breakfast and lunch meal packages will be available on Mondays and Wednesdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at 62 schools, including Greenbelt and Berwyn Heights Elementary Schools. Students attending in-school summer programs will receive breakfast and lunch.

Museum Reflects on Greenbelt Pride During Online Lecture

by Melissa Signorini

It was a time for reflection at the Greenbelt Museum on Thursday, July 15 as Greenbelt Pride founding member Francis DeBernardo spoke about the history of pride in this town. The organization was the first LGBTQ group in Greenbelt, with DeBernardo setting up the group’s first meeting in June 2005 at the Community Center. “I got the ball rolling on it because I had moved to Greenbelt in 2004 and was seeing lots of rainbow and LGBTQ stickers around town but was not meeting many LGBTQ people,” he said. He spoke about LGBTQ avocation and groups in the 70s, 80s and early 90s being largely urban-based. By the late 90s and early 2000s, however, suburban groups were springing up in nearby communities like Hyattsville and Silver Spring. “LGBTQ people in the suburbs at the time were really starting to organize to help support and help one another,” said DeBernardo.

History of Organization

He said he did not have his sights set on an organization in the beginning, but rather a meeting to get people together to celebrate pride in Greenbelt, a theme that was traditionally recognized in June. He said the meeting grabbed the attention of two or three people, but ended up drawing 15 new faces. He credited Greenbelter Allison Myers for creating the organization’s name and slogan: “you can’t spell Greenbelt without G-B-L-T.”

A follow-up event was a pride celebration held at the New Deal Café, where then-manager Ellen Siegel added a special item on the menu for the group to enjoy: “guacamole, bacon, lettuce and tomato, so that it would have been G-B-L-T,” said DeBernardo. “Everybody ordered that.”

Early Goals

There were two goals at the top of the list for the group right off the bat: social support and visibility. DeBernardo said that one of the difficulties in being part of the LGBTQ community in America is that “they tend to be invisible. It’s hard to identify who the other LGBTQ people in a community are.” For this reason, the group started holding game nights, talent shows and other events for bringing people together. At one event, two members even built a frame doorway so that people could tell their coming out stories, and then walk through the door.

In their first year as a group, Greenbelt Pride got a lawyer to do some pro-bono work for them, work that included petitioning the city to be recognized as an official group.

After the State of Maryland passed marriage equality legislation in 2012, an anti-LGBTQ group formed in town to advocate against the decision. A group of Greenbelt Pride-ers formed a walk in return. “As we walked down Crescent Road, more and more Greenbelters joined our contingent, and by the time we got to the reviewing stand we were 100 strong at least,” said DeBernardo. He called it an “incredible sign of support.”

Looking Ahead

As for the future, DeBernardo believes that although Greenbelt remains a progressive town in city “to go beyond” county and state regulations, as long as they remained “consistent.”

In general, council was very appreciative of the effort and thoroughness of the report, and amenable to most of its recommendations, as was Byrd, who praised them for their willingness to face tough questions on their findings.

Report Summary

PSAC members Stan Zirkin and Peggy Higgins gave a PowerPoint presentation that summarized the main issues raised in the report. The subjects included de-escalation, duty to intervene, transparency, hiring, racial profiling, stop and frisk, use of force, civil liberties, militarization, immigration and civilian oversight. The recommendations came in three categories: proposals that seek to deter police misconduct, proposals that encourage fair and bias-free policing and proposals for data collection to discern if changes are occurring.

Some of the main recommendations were: no police interference with videos taken by the public and mandatory review of body camera footage in instances of use of force and stop and frisk; emphasis on de-escalation in General Orders concerning use of force and lethal weapons; whistleblower protection for officers who report on police misconduct; documentation of all police complaints; officers must identify themselves before forcibly entering premises; and submittal of all modified General Orders to the city manager and PSAC within two weeks of implementation.

Video, Audio Footage

There was a debate on the issue of release of video footage. PSAC felt that the current 30-day deadline was too long and that the three-day proposal by Byrd was too short, as informed by Bowers. Captain Timothy White explained that the state mandates redaction of personal information, like faces and vehicle license plates (in the form of blurring the image), and audio containing personal and police procedural information that is unrelated to the incident being studied. White emphasized that redaction did not mean the editing or removal of footage. As well, if the video is part of an investigation, the police department may need to take direction from the state attorney’s office, causing delays. With only a single IT employee in the department staff, and the lengthy redaction process, White said that seven days would be a reasonable compromise.

Diversity, Racial Issues

Diversity in the department was of concern to PSAC, and CALEA as well. As of 2009, the Greenbelt population was 26 percent White/non-Hispanic, 48 percent Black/non-Hispanic, 14 percent Hispanic and 12 percent other. Yet, as of 2019, 65 percent of sworn officers and 80 percent of supervisory officers were white. PSAC recommended the hiring of a law enforcement specialist in recruiting to address this diversity disparity. Byrd remarked that “this was the elephant in the room,” thanking PSAC for addressing it.

A related issue was that between 2016 and 2019, of the 47 uses of force, 42 concerned Blacks and Hispanics. PSAC, while finding the statistic disturbing, granted that bias was difficult to conclusively determine.

As well, in a comparison of traffic warnings vs. citations from 2015 to 2019, PSAC revealed that, concerning the overall percentages of citations: Black males received 44 percent and Black females 19 percent; Hispanic males received 17 percent and females 4 percent; white males received 10 percent and females 3 percent; and other-race males 2 percent and females 1 percent. Bowers said that traffic data can be “nuanced” and that it was difficult to make conclusions from “a large data set.”

Clearer Definitions

Stop and frisk was a major topic. Bowers explained that the term originated from the New York City policy and that the legal term was a Terry stop. He said that law dictates that the policy allows a pat down of a civilian for weapons if “reasonable suspicion” that “a crime is afoot,” or if verbal consent is obtained. PSAC and most of council recognized the need for such a policy, but felt that a clearer definition of “reasonable suspicion” be included in the General Orders to ensure a just application.

Bowers said that a tracking system for police officers exists that records their employment history, assuring that any officers who had been flagged for misconduct would not be hired by the department.

Transparent Process

PSAC Chair Laura Kressler said that the report process was transparent throughout and that PSAC is a diverse group, with four whites and three blacks. The report was voted upon in phases and was unanimous, with each part available on screenshots. Each member, said Kressler, was given equal opportunity to share ideas, a point concurred by member Eunice Pierre, herself a black woman.

Next Steps

Bowers said he awaits state guidance based on the April 2021 legislation, which will completely take effect in five years, before making major changes to the General Orders. Yet, Greenbelt already adheres to some of the regulations, such as the use of body cameras.

Councilmember Judith Davis

asked Bowers to make a list of all PSAC recommendations that can be enacted now, especially those concerning definitions, and those that would require council action, with Bowers acknowledging that was possible. Councilmember Emmett Jordan asked that viable alternatives be made for those that were not feasible. Byrd and Davis hoped for a response before the end of the summer in order for council to make final decisions on the mayor’s proposed legislation given the import of the issue.

a progressive era, the need for LGBTQ organizations still exists. One reason is for young people, to “let them know that there are LGBTQ people who are proud of their identity and can be role models for them,” he said. Another is for new or potential residents that can have no doubts about coming to a city that appreciates their LGBTQ community.

Three Sisters Garden Hosts Outdoor Poetry Gathering

by Julie Rapp

The Three Sisters Garden East, located in Schrom Hills Park, held a poetry reading event Sunday, July 18 from 5 to 7 p.m. Effie Levner, the garden coordinator for this site, feels there is a strong connection between poetry and gardens. Levner conceived of the idea of hosting an event like this at the garden saying, "nature and beauty come together with poetry." The garden was in full bloom, with bunches of grapes dangling from the grapevines hanging over the arched entryways. Upon entering the inner circle of the garden, one could see tall sunflowers in bloom as well as pumpkins, tomatoes and beans ripening on their vines. An inviting circle of chairs for participants was set up under a shade tree next to the garden. An array of poetry books was spread across a table nearby for visitors to view. A diverse group of about 20 Greenbelt neighbors and friends gathered under the tree to share poems they wrote or favorites they wanted to read.

There was a sense of peace and thoughtfulness among the participants as poems were read from poets such as Rumi, Merwin and Thich Nhat Hanh and composers such as Judy Collins. An underlying message of the universality of humanity and the importance of taking care of the earth seemed to be behind many of the readings.

Levner stated, "The reason I organized this event of poetry reading in the garden came from spending a lot of time working in the garden, planting seeds and observing everything growing and blooming. It can be very inspiring and I wanted to share this beautiful experience with the community through poetry reading." Levner chose the poet Rumi, sharing his poem, Who Am I. When Levner sits in the garden she is reminded of Rumi's appreciation of creation and the creator. She described how from a small seed we get a plant two or three feet tall with different shades and colors. Said Levner, "it all looks and feels divine, exactly the way Rumi felt toward nature when he wrote his poems in the 13th century." Levner hopes that people will find that poetry can be soothing and therapeutic for the soul in challenging times.

The garden currently has four dedicated volunteers that come on a regular basis to weed, water and harvest and they would be happy to have new volunteers join them. Email Levner at effielevner@aol.com for more information about the Three Sisters Garden East.
