Winter Wonderland a Success For Venture Crew and Guests

by Camille O’Roark

The Honk! Situation plays at the Winter Wonderland.

On Saturday, December 10 from 5 to 8 p.m., Venture Crew 746 held their second annual Winter Wonderland holiday fundraiser at Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church.

The event featured intricate decorations along a lighted walk through the woods, campfires and a scavenger hunt. Other activities included face painting, a visit from Santa and a 15-minute performance of A Christmas Carol, by the Kate Robinson Teen Players. There was also live music from Greenbelt Honk! and a police dog demonstration by the Greenbelt Police Department. The Greenbelt Municipal Swim Team and Greenbelt Elementary School had information tables and some fun activities. Christian Horchler, the lead youth coordinator said, “The event was a success! Our turnout was just over 300 people – that’s 100 more than last year. The generous proceeds from our event will be put back into the crew and used to fund gear, equipment and travel-related expenses.”

Venturing Crew 746 is a troop of scouts ages 14 to 21 who go on trips and have adventures in the wild. In July the crew spent a week canoeing and exploring the Adirondack Mountains. Venture See WONDERLAND, page 12

“At the end of the day, it’s about our kids and their futures,” declared Jonathan Briggs, 34, the newly elected Prince George’s County School Board member for District 2, representing Greenbelt.

“It’s how we put kids first. How do we work in partnership with everyone in the community, for everyone? I understand what’s at stake when we don’t get it right. Kids deserve to receive education that prepares them for everything they desire to do.”

Briggs began his two-year term on December 5 and looks forward to tackling the budget starting with the December 8 meeting. “It was an election year, so it’s a little bit delayed,” he said. He’s also looking forward to “meeting and building relationships with principals and parents.”

Children’s Medicine Shortages Hitting Pharmacies in Greenbelt

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

After last winter, with its onset of Omicron, school closings and no Covid-19 vaccine yet available to children under two, one might have thought things could only get better for parents and their little ones. However, the challenges have continued throughout 2022 with shortages of baby formula and pediatric needles and recently a surge of fall and winter illnesses, accompanied by less availability of sick visits at understaffed pediatricians’ offices. In addition, the knock-on effect of the triad of serious viruses currently affecting children – Covid, flu and RSV – is a sudden shortage of children’s fever-reducers and pain medication.

On December 3, National Public Radio reported the present “triple-demic” means fever-reducing medicines are in short supply. The supply chain is strong, but demand is surging, they reported.

A week later, the situation See MEDICINE, page 7

Council Acts on Maglev Brief, Legislative Issues, Purchases

by Deb Daniel

Greenbelt City Council authorized Jill Grant and Associates to research and perform an amicus brief in support of Westport Development Corporation’s opposition to the maglev condemnation of land needed for the project. According to Wikipedia, an amicus curia (literally friend of the court) is an individual or organization who is not a party to a legal case, but may assist a court by offering relevant information, expertise or insight.

Mayor Emmett Jordan asked Interim City Manager Timothy George to provide an estimate of monies and a timeline for this legal intervention. George replied that council allocated $250,000 in the 2023 budget for maglev legal expenses and no additional monies are required. Councilmember Colin Byrd thanked Councilmembers Judith Davis and Rodney Roberts for their leadership in bringing this project to fruition. The motion to authorize Jill

Letters to the Editor

Traffic Calming On Lastner Lane

I think it's great that the city is experimenting with traffic calming on Lastner Lane by not painting centerlines. In the past, we've had several parked cars damaged on that street and speeding drivers have routinely blown through the stop signs. Centerline markings on neighborhood streets make the street look more like a high-speed road. They signal to drivers that the lane is theirs as long as they don't cross the center. However, they are not required or even recommended on neighborhood streets. The Federal Highway Administration's Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices (mutcd.fhwa.dot.gov/hdm/2009/part3/part3b.htm) standard for centerline painting is for roads with 20 feet or more of "traveled way" and that serve at least 6,000 vehicles per day. For more professional discussion of centerline striping on residential streets, see strongtowns.org/journal/2016/10/31/ask-r-moses-does-center-line-striping-make-streets-safer.

FHA's Manual standards for centerline striping do not apply to residential neighborhood streets with low traffic counts and speed limits like Lastner Lane – therefore, it's our choice if we want them or not. In my opinion, the residents of Lastner Lane and other nearby streets should have the most say on the matter. Is the street safer for drivers, walkers, kids playing in the yards, people getting into and out of parked cars, bike riders and so on, with centerline striping or not? In my opinion, delivery drivers, buses and cut-through drivers go slower without the centerlines. Moreover, I think centerline striping triggers apps like Google/Waze to direct more traffic through Greenbelt. Finally, I think if drivers need centerlines to safely navigate a street during low-visibility conditions, they are probably trying to drive too fast! That said, it's an open question for residents to decide, and others may not share my opinions, which is fine.

It does bother me that someone on the city staff apparently blamed one resident rather than explaining the pros and cons. The staffer I spoke with was extremely polite, listened to my idea, read the materials I sent and moved the idea up the food chain. That's really all I can ask from city staff – I appreciate the courtesy and great public service!

Current Sad Condition Of Greenbelt Park

The July microburst storm that knocked out power in Greenbelt also downed dozens of trees in Greenbelt Park, closing all the trails. Many of us who enjoy running and hiking in this oasis of tranquility are eager to return to our exercise regime.

Yet months later, only the paved roads have been cleared of fallen trees and the campground and one picnic area reopened. The trails remain off limits. The restrooms are in dire need of freshening and campsites are eroded.

Despite an on-site maintenance department, no one working there is certified to operate a chainsaw. My recent visit there to ask about any ongoing trail clearing was greeted with thinly veiled hostility and my questions answered with stony silence. Rangers and volunteers from a nearby national park, licensed to use such equipment, have expressed a keen interest to help. No one with authority from the National Park Service (NPS) has responded to their offer by granting them permission to work in Greenbelt Park and alleviate the logjam.

My attempts to contact the NPS by phone or email have been unsuccessful, as no one has responded to my inquiries. Their robotic phone answering machine provided no useful information.

It may well be time to reach

Spoiler Alert

Based on Michael Ausiello's best-selling memoir Spoiler Alert: The Hero Dies, the film is a heartwarming, funny and life-affirming story of how the relationship between Michael (Jim Parsons) and his husband Kit Cowan (Ben Aldridge) is transformed and deepened when Cowan falls ill. Sally Field and Bill Irwin play Cowan's parents. Said critic Sara Clements of Pajiba, "Spoiler Alert is an incredibly sweet and sincere exploration of love and relationships, and also turns out to be a touching film about found family. It succeeds in exuding what we look for most this time of year: warmth."

All the Beauty and the Bloodshed

Directed by Academy Award-winning filmmaker Laura Poitras, the film is an epic, emotional and interconnected story about internationally renowned artist and activist Nan Goldin told through her slideshows, intimate interviews, ground-breaking photography and rare footage of her personal fight to hold the Sackler family accountable for the overdose crisis.

Elf

Buddy (Will Ferrell) was accidentally transported to the North Pole as a toddler and raised to adulthood among Santa's elves. Unable to shake the feeling that he doesn't fit in, the adult Buddy travels to New York, in full elf uniform, in search of his real father. As it happens, this is Walter Hobbs (James Caan), a cynical businessman. After a DNA test proves this, Walter reluctantly attempts to start a relationship with the childlike Buddy with increasingly chaotic results.

Reel and Meal Film Shows Mining Impacts

On Monday, December 19 all are welcome at the monthly Reel & Meal at the New Deal Café in Roosevelt Center. The featured film is The Shadow of Gold, produced by Bullfrog Films. The documentary investigates from two perspectives how gold is extracted: the mining companies that dig deep and lop off mountaintops and the 20 million miners in the world's poorest nations who extract gold by hand earning just enough to survive. Discussion after the screening will be led by local labor activist Kurt Stand.

The film will be screened in-house and via Zoom. The free program starts at 7 p.m. Prior registration is required for virtual attendees at tinyurl.com/ReelNMealDec19. Sign in any time after 6:45 p.m. At the Café, dinners will be available after 4 p.m., including some plant-based options. Carryout Co-op Supermarket Meatless Monday meals can be picked up for Zoom at-home viewing after 11 a.m. from the Deli Hot Bar with Dodah's Spinach Lasagna (vegan) featured.

The Shadow of Gold follows the global supply chain of this precious metal, with attention to both environmental and business perspectives. It presents the severe social and ecological impacts of contemporary mining, as well as potential options for more sustainable practices. The filmmakers hope that it will encourage viewers to take steps to protect the land and the laborers that suffer from gold mining.

Reel & Meal is a monthly film series on peace, social justice, animal rights and environmental issues. Its sponsors are Utopia Film Festival and the Prince George's County Peace and Justice Coalition. For more information, see Reel & Meal at the New Deal Café on Facebook or contact Lucy Duff at justpeacepg@gmail.com or 202-549-5574.

The Hallelujah chorus is the finale.

The chorale includes several members from Greenbelt and was popular with local music fans pre-pandemic for its full-on audience participation of Handel's Messiah every December. This concert is reduced in size and duration, and is being held at the Laurel Presbyterian Church, 7610 Sandy Spring Road, just a 20-minute drive from Greenbelt.

Tickets are available at the door for a small charge (see ad in this week's newspaper), and kids under 12 are free. There will be a brief intermission along with a craft fair. Masks are optional and will be available at the door. For more information including how to join the choir for future concerts, visit centralmarylandchorale.org.

Grant and Associates for research and a possible filing of an amicus brief passed unanimously.

Legislative Priorities

Agreement on the final list of city, state and county legislative priorities was sought. Jordan suggested making the Greenbelt Metro Station improvements a priority. Councilmember Kristen Weaver suggested dropping food truck legislation from the list because the state and county have recently changed their legislation. George noted that Greenbelt remains subject to all the permitting requirements as before with Davis stating that Greenbelt will still need to investigate city-level legislation pertaining to food-truck permitting. Davis suggested adding sidewalk maintenance along state highways to the list of priorities. Other topics included Greenbelt school boundary changes.

Jordan suggested the Bureau of Engraving and Printing facility at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center might need closer examination as to how trucks will arrive there; he was concerned this might mean changes to the Baltimore-Washington Parkway to allow truck traffic. In connection with this, Roberts wanted to retain the priority of opposing privatization of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway and Jordan concurred. Greenbelt resident Michael Hartman suggested that since the Community Solar project will expire in 2024, priority should be given to making it a permanent item.

Jordan asked George to have staff research these priorities and prepare a booklet that can be given to state and county representatives at the upcoming legislative dinner.

Vehicle Purchases

Three vehicles will be purchased for $90,426 (two for Animal Control and one for the Crisis Intervention Team). Police Chief Richard Bowers noted the previous order of Animal Control vehicles was cancelled by the manufacturer and that the new Crisis Intervention Team member expected in January will need a vehicle.

Roberts noted that the average lifespan of a vehicle is about 20 years and vehicles can be retrofitted for electric or fuel cell use. Jordan and Gordon both hoped this would be the last vehicle purchase for this budget year and also that Greenbelt would transition to an electric fleet. Davis recommended adding electric charging stations to the budget at the prebudget meetings and this was unanimously approved by council.

Wi-Fi Equipment

The purchase of Meraki Wi-Fi equipment (access points and firewall) will extend the communications networks in Greenbelt for a total cost of $50,506. Director of Information Technology Dale Worley explained that the areas most in need of access are primarily in central Greenbelt but that parts of Franklin Park will be assessed. Byrd suggested that the Schrom Hills Park pavilion and Springhill Lake's rear open areas should be considered in the future for assessment. Weaver noted that the purchased equipment is for indoor, not outdoor spaces and that the challenge with large outdoor spaces involves an expensive backhaul provision, which connects the central network to individual or public networks. Worley added that the floating Wi-Fi access points could be moved temporarily to areas where connectivity is needed. Purchase was unanimously approved by council.

Administrative Reports

George is working with Elizabeth Park, director of CARES, and Christine Peusch, executive director of the Maryland State Child Care Association, to start the development of a Childcare Voucher Program using American Rescue Plan Act funds. George is also researching partnership opportunities for the program. When the voucher program is ready for review, it will come up for discussion and approval at a regular council meeting.

George mentioned Economic Development Manager Kevin Simpson's work on grants and micro-loans for small businesses and that staff members are now training on the new financial management systems. George also noted that the Comcast renewal franchise agreement had been 10 years in the making and had involved many resolute staff members in its development. He felt that, as a result of their efforts, this agreement is one of the most beneficial given to a municipality.

Become a Plogger: Make Greenbelt Sparkle

What is "plogging"? It's an eco-friendly exercise that involves picking up trash while jogging or walking – taking care of one's health at the same time. Plogging was coined by Swedish outdoorsman and environmentalist Erik Ahlstrom and comes from plocka, the Swedish word for pick up.

Greenbelt Plogs, a RUAK initiative, is a fun and engaging way to clean up litter from the streets, paths, streams and ponds while raising awareness on the importance of preventing storm-water pollution.

seems to have worsened. I discovered this when my own 6-year-old developed a fever. It's not always necessary to medicate for an elevated temperature, but as hers climbed over 103° F, and she became increasingly pained, we knew we had to treat it. Thus began several days marked by waves of fever peaking and then dipping with medicine, with tepid baths and washcloths on foreheads, buckets by bedsides, loads of laundry ... and an unexpectedly difficult search for fever medication.

The first day we found children's ibuprofen at the Co-op, but no children's Tylenol or other acetaminophen, and no infant pain or fever medication (for the under 2s). They were also out of Pedialyte popsicles, another staple for feverish children.

The ibuprofen helped my daughter dramatically, but it can only be given every 6-8 hours. To bring relief between doses you could alternate it with acetaminophen ... if you have it. We didn't.

By Saturday morning, we had two children throwing up with fevers. This time we ventured to Greenbelt's Target. There the racks for children's medication were alarmingly bare – no ibuprofen or acetaminophen for the 2- to 11-year-olds. There were four packets of an ibuprofen in suppository form for infants (under age 2).

At this point I checked Amazon; their options for children's Tylenol were: out of stock, not arriving until the new year or else hawked by third-party sellers for $20 a 4-oz. bottle, plus shipping.

On Sunday we ventured to both CVS locations on Greenbelt Road. There was a single bottle of infant ibuprofen on the shelves at the 24-hour store but nothing at all for the age 2-11 "children" group. At the second CVS there was no infant or children's ibuprofen but there was a single bottle of children's acetaminophen.

By Monday we had three children with fevers. One that would need infant medication and two that need children's.

Amanda Ferouz, pharmacist at Greenbelt Co-op Pharmacy, said the Co-op Pharmacy is seeing a shortage in part because they don't usually stock much children's medication to begin with. There haven't been many parents using the pharmacy for children's medications in general but, she added, "the neighborhood is changing."

This month there's a sudden clamor nationwide for children's Tylenol, in particular. "The shortages are nationwide," said Ferouz. "It's not because it's not available but because it's in higher demand." Ferouz has managed to order some generic options and has placed an order with their wholesalers. According to Ferouz, the wholesalers themselves don't stock that much and so they in turn will be placing orders with manufacturers. "The whole country is demanding it at the same time," said Ferouz. She anticipates the situation improving over the next few weeks as wholesalers get stock into the supply chain and as demand hopefully drops as children get over their illnesses. In the meantime, Ferouz advises that if parents have ibuprofen they can use that. Its only disadvantage being that it needs to be given with food; they can also use fans and tepid baths or compresses to bring down fevers.

The only pain and fever medication for children remaining at the Greenbelt Target on Saturday were four packs of infant suppositories.

Recent Greenbelter

Raised on the South Side of Chicago, Briggs settled in Greenbelt in 2018 to be close to Washington, D.C., and his barber and to have less of the hustle and bustle of the city. Briggs admits, "My life's been so work-driven. A goal of mine is to get back into the arts, painting, drawing, film and video production." An avid gym-goer, he practices strength training and hiking when possible. Aside from arts and fitness, Briggs enjoys Jamaican food and reading.

When asked about teachers who inspired him, he recalled Mr. Ali, a high school history teacher, who was "open" and "safe" for young folks to approach about their concerns, health and mental health. Briggs' voice warmed as he remembered a Creative Arts teacher who offered him new experiences and "took me under her wing."

Access for All

"I am a person who is rooted in social justice," Briggs said. He described moving from a private primary school to a public high school on Chicago's South Side as, "my first experience with education inequity." He almost dropped out. "It was a hard situation," he recalled. He subsequently transferred into a more functional school. Briggs says this eye-opening experience has framed the course of his life.

After college Briggs worked as a near-peer mentor through the federal City Year Program. The program addressed the dropout crisis by building relationships with students navigating real world challenges. Briggs experienced a system that "left kids by the wayside" and realized "something needs to be done about this," leading him into Teach for America.

Connecting

After confronting the realities of the classroom, Briggs left teaching to address what he described as the "upstream issue," saying, "What we need is people who sit in positions of power who understand what the issues are and understand the lived experiences of kids and teachers (and) administrators." He worked for the governor's office in Illinois and sought to influence educational policy in Congress.

Briggs currently works as a policy manager at America Forward, an organization that "unites social entrepreneurs with policy makers." The group is the policy arm of New Profit, a venture philanthropy organization, bringing venture capital to invest in social causes while aiming for a financial return. He explains that his day job involves lobbying Congress and the administration on behalf of programs and organizations, including those that provide resources for schools and "creating pathways for kids" into careers in education. Briggs describes his work as creating connections and highlighting "really great programs" that are making a difference for students at a local level. He believes his job dovetails with and provides flexibility for "attending school board meetings, hearings, research and meeting with the stakeholders."

Concerns of Families

Asked about his plans for his first 90 days, Briggs says he is assessing what is possible. He says he's figuring out the stakeholders and issues involved in representing District 2. He mentioned parents, families, principals, other school board members and local politicians. Asked how he plans to communicate with his constituents, Briggs says he is leaning toward regular face-to-face meetings that would be recorded so those who cannot attend could watch.

Briggs said, "As a former educator I understand ... instructional practices that need to be in place ... research-based, evidence-based, that really move our students and our schools in the direction of closing the achievement gap that has been in existence for far too long. It's also about understanding how schools work and where money comes from ... to address specific things that schools are interested in." Briggs hopes to support Prince George's school leadership to tap into resources via philanthropy, the area he's currently working in, as well as governmental funds to address "all of the challenges our school system is facing – inequity, mental health crisis, teacher shortages, the academic achievement gaps."

School Boundaries

Briggs is honest that he has more to learn about the specific needs of families in District 2. When asked about the possible impacts of changing school boundaries on Greenbelt Middle School, and about the fears of local parents that moving students to different schools to avoid overcrowding will reduce funding and lead to higher student-teacher ratios, Briggs replied, "It would, obviously, impact boundaries and what's your local community school ... but I don't think that's going to change the volume of students. As far as the teacher shortage challenge is concerned, I don't think that's necessarily going to impact."

He also mentioned possibilities of classroom trailers and the need for school board members to work together to support families who live in one district while their students attend school in another. Briggs stressed that he plans to meet with local politicians and parents to learn more.

A Decade's Data Shows Raised Safety Gap in Greenbelt Areas

by Stephanie Quinn

This first report on Greenbelt's crime data focuses on geographic implications. A second report will focus on types of crime in Greenbelt.

The number of larcenies, or thefts, in the first nine months of the year in Greenbelt rose by 28 percent between 2021 and 2022, the largest yearly increase in the past decade, according to monthly crime data from the Greenbelt Police Department.

Between 2013 and 2022, the share of larceny in Greenbelt grew most in the Franklin Park area, but Greenbelt Center, often known as Old Greenbelt, has seen more of the most recent increase.

"We take crime just as seriously in Franklin Park as we do in Greenbelt Center," said Greenbelt Police Department spokesperson Hannah Glasgow. "There's a lot of community conversation, and we get a little bit more from those Facebook groups when it's Center incidents. But that really doesn't affect how our officers do their job."

This story used monthly crime data from January through September of each year from 2013 to 2022, since monthly reports for 2022 were only available through September at the time of writing. The data includes only part 1 offenses counted in accordance with the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting standards that Greenbelt

Police were able to confirm. This article uses the police's geographic sectors to describe Greenbelt. The FBI defines larceny as theft not by force or fraud, including commercial theft, residential theft and theft from auto, including theft of auto parts. Motor vehicle theft is a separate category.

Every year since 2013, Franklin Park saw more larceny than Old Greenbelt between January and September. Greenbelt East saw more larceny than Old Greenbelt during this period in each of the past 10 years.

The crime gap between Franklin Park and Old Greenbelt has widened over the past decade.

At the end of September 2013, Franklin Park and Old Greenbelt had seen about the same number of larcenies for that year. In fact, more larcenies had happened in Old Greenbelt – 98 to the Franklin Park area's 96.

In 2020, the year when the difference between the two sectors' share of larcenies from January through September was widest, Franklin Park had seen more than twice as many larcenies as Old Greenbelt – 159 compared to 70. As of the end of September 2022, 39.5 percent more larcenies had been recorded in Franklin Park (180) than Old Greenbelt (129).

Glasgow said theft from autos, including theft of auto parts such as airbags and catalytic converters, has spiked in Greenbelt and Prince George's County alike.

Monthly crime data show that theft of motor vehicles has risen over the past five years. While there had been 75 confirmed motor vehicle thefts by the end of September 2022, there were 89 for that period in 2021, the highest in the decade. While Old Greenbelt's share of motor vehicle thefts has increased over the past five years from 7 percent to 16 percent, at the end of September Franklin Park had seen well over double Old Greenbelt's number of motor vehicle thefts and 41.3 percent of Greenbelt's total.

"We have individuals who are part of lower income brackets, and unfortunately that's who we see becoming victims to a lot of the crime in Greenbelt," Glasgow said.

Glasgow said the city's police urge residents to lock their cars, park in well-lit areas and leave no property in plain view. Owners of hybrids, whose catalytic converters contain higher quantities of precious metals, should take particular care. The department encourages residents to consider the Takoma Park Police Department's Etch and Catch catalytic converter theft prevention program. The Takoma Park Police Department partnered with a local auto shop that etches vehicle owners' license plate numbers on

Larceny has long accounted for most Greenbelt incidents

The first nine months of 2022 in Greenbelt have seen more crime than recent years, but few crimes are more prevalent than a decade ago. Larceny and aggravated assault were exceptions, and motor vehicle theft is higher than it has been for most of the decade.

"By putting in these extra roadblocks," Glasgow said, "hopefully it would make whoever's thinking about targeting your property or your vehicle say, 'No, I'll go for an easier target.'"

Jessica Helms, 34, a librarian living in Greenbelt said she remembers reports of checks stolen from U.S. Postal Service mailboxes after the pandemic compelled many people to tele-work, but that she considers her neighborhood in Old Greenbelt "pretty safe."

For Pat Kennedy, 62, a retiree living in Greenbelt East, a couple of isolated incidents have not prevented her from feeling safe if she needs to go out at night. She said, "I think I'm at the age where I don't care anymore. If it happens, it happens. What am I going to do about it?"

Learning to Work Harder to Get Faster: Track Star Elgin Gordon Now Coaches

by Sununu Bah

When he graduated from Eleanor Roosevelt High School in 1990, Elgin Gordon was recognized as the Washington area's fastest high school athlete of all time. That year he set the area record for the 100-meter dash with the time of 10.36 seconds at the National Junior Championships in Fresno, Calif. In his last season at Roosevelt, Gordon went undefeated against interscholastic competition in both the 100 and 200. He also captured gold in the state championships in both events and led the 4x100 and 4x400 relays to victories in state championships, running anchor. Until the age of 13 he had lost nearly all the races he competed in.

New ERHS track coach Elgin Gordon was recognized as the Washington area's fastest high school athlete of all time in 1990.

Gordon went on to run in college and professional meets and is now heading into his 10th year of coaching boys and girls track and field and cross country at Roosevelt. What he learned in his journey to become a better runner he now teaches students on that same Roosevelt track.

Motivation to Improve

Before he began lacing up his spikes at Eleanor Roosevelt in 1986, Gordon had an experience that would alter his fortune in track. He had been running track with Glenarden's Dellwood Avenue Striders and lost nearly all the races he competed in. That summer, as a rising 9th grader, Gordon ran the last leg of the 400-meter relay and received the baton 30 meters ahead of rival Michael Carter. But Carter overtook him and won the race. Afterward, Gordon joined his teammates, one of whom had passed out from exhaustion and didn't know the race was lost. This teammate looked up and asked Gordon if they won the relay. After hearing the reply that they hadn't, despite their lead, he looked Gordon in the eye and said, "You sorry," before passing out again. Gordon paused and then said, "Ever since that day, when my friend told me that I'm sorry, my whole track career changed," Gordon said. He knew he had to work harder to get faster. And he did.

Discipline, Consistency

Working hard, and becoming disciplined, consistent and punctual are all traits that Gordon instills in his students. So when he says the bus leaves at 3:30 p.m. for meets, it is not waiting for anyone at 3:35. Torrance Zellner, who competed against Gordon in high school, said Gordon is "definitely a no-nonsense coach." Zellner said Gordon knows exactly what it takes for his athletes to be successful – whether it is the workouts or taking the kids to nationally ranked meets to give them the needed exposure. "If they buy into the program and they understand what he's trying to get out of them, he'll give them the world," Zellner said. "He'll do everything he can do to put them in a good position to succeed."

A Winning Team

Roosevelt has won 49 state championships in track and field since 1978 although none, yet, under Gordon's watchful eye. While Gordon said he would love to add to the collection, what he is primarily focused on is having each individual athlete improve the times they had from the beginning of the season. "Each meet should display an athlete's progression," he said.

Junior Camille Watford has bought into that concept. She began competing at Roosevelt last indoor season, her sophomore year, after competing mainly in mid- to long-distance races for the Bowie Boys & Girls Tracksters. She said that she began running the 400-meter dash last outdoor season and dropped six seconds since the start of the season.

Junior Lauryn Djaouga has been competing at Roosevelt since her freshman year, but like Watford, she began running new events and slashed her times in them. Djaouga dropped about two to three seconds in the 100-meter hurdles, she said, and four seconds in the 300-meter hurdles last outdoor season.

Both Djaouga and Watford said that while the variety of workouts the coaches have provided have helped their development, Gordon's words have had a lasting impact. For Djaouga, it's, "If you put in the work, then you're gonna get to where you want to be. And if you don't put in the work, you're gonna definitely regret it." And for Watford, it's, "Don't be afraid to push out and just do your best."

While Gordon has yet to win a state championship coaching, he said he is able to claim three lawyers and a doctor on one relay team and two valedictorians. "You have to stay consistent; you have to stay disciplined and those who learn to, are usually the ones that are successful in everything they do," Gordon said.

Meals on Wheels Is Named A "Community Champion"

by Karen Yoho

Meals on Wheels of College Park (MOWCP) was recently named a Prince George's County District 3 Community Champion. College Park Councilmember Dannielle Glaros recognized their service during the Covid-19 pandemic, "For the longtime dedication to providing nutritious meals and vital safety checks to residents in need and for continuing operations during incredibly challenging times over the past two years."

Formed in 1974 to feed a small number of elderly and homebound people in College Park facing hunger and social isolation, MOWCP now provides meal delivery to approximately 170 seniors and persons with disabilities five days a week. MOWCP serves adjoining cities and towns in Prince George's County, including Greenbelt, Adelphi, Berwyn Heights, Hyattsville, Beltsville and Riverdale Park. "Clients receive a hot, nutritious lunch/dinner, plus healthy options for breakfast, a light lunch or dinner meal and one half-gallon of milk (weekly)," explained Lisa Ealley, president of MOWCP. "More importantly, in addition to ensuring nutritional needs, our caring volunteers perform a wellness check and provide a social link to the isolation they may face."

MOWCP volunteers serve in a wide variety of roles from food preparation and meal packaging, to delivering food to homes, to managing the deliveries to ensure dietary requirements are met for those on restricted diets. Volunteers are always needed to fill in for an assortment of tasks and schedules are also varied, from monthly and weekly assignments to daily shifts. "Every piece of our operation relies on volunteers. From sticking labels on bags to picking up donated food from farms and restaurants," said Ealley. MOWCP is seeking the donation of a van or small truck to make these pick-ups easier.

Recently, MOWCP volunteers prepared emergency food bags for clients. The City of Greenbelt funded the contents of the bags, which contain shelf-stable foods for times when Meals on Wheels is unable to reach people, such as during winter storms or other weather-related emergencies that may prevent drivers from reaching clients' homes.

"As the end of the year approaches, we want to thank those who serve as volunteers, donate to MOWCP or refer clients to us," added Ealley. "We want to be a lifeline to those in our community who are food insecure."

To volunteer for the program, or get more information, visit mealsonwheelsofcollegepark.org.
