Long an Activist, Jenni Pompei Strives to be Effective in New Role

by Dana Tompkins

Nobody can accuse Councilmember Jenni Pompei of sitting back. The list of organizations and interests she's involved in and titles she holds seems endless. There's the Eleanor Roosevelt High School PTSA, Eleanor and Franklin Roosevelt Democratic Club, the Greenbelt Library and Greenbelt Pride, just to name a few. Even she laughs when asked what her Google calendar looks like.

Former mayor and outgoing councilmember J Davis embraces newly elected Jenni Pompei as the city council election results are announced, November 7, 2023.

And, of course, since last November, Pompei added Councilmember to that list of titles. In the most recent election, Pompei received the fourth most votes, surpassed only by three incumbents – Emmett Jordan, Kristin Weaver and the late Council-member Ric Gordon, who died a few weeks following his re-election. Growing up in western Massachusetts and, especially southern Maryland, Pompei reports that her family was more socially liberal than many of their neighbors. She learned the importance of standing firmly in her beliefs while also seeking common ground with others. This is an approach that has served her well in Greenbelt, where she's lived with her family since 2018, as well as in her other professional endeavors.

Currently a magazine editor at a nonprofit organization, Pompei has also served as a fundraiser and activist for other

Feel Free to Clown Around; May's Circus Camp is Back

by Rasheeda Childress

For the first time since the pandemic, Circus Camp is returning in person to Greenbelt, and will be helmed by Greg May. The debut return of Circus Camp takes place over spring break this month, followed by two sessions during the summer. At press time a few spaces remained for the spring break and session three camps but are likely to fill up quickly.

"I'm very excited about coming back," May said of returning to Greenbelt's camp lineup.

May debuted Circus Camp in Greenbelt in 2008, says Chris Cherry, performing arts coordinator for the city. During the years when May ran the camp at the Community Center, the camp was so popular that hopeful participants were often waitlisted.

With the return of Circus Camp, May is looking forward to teaching kids not just how to ride a unicycle, juggle or clown around, but also some of life's most important and universal lessons.

"The most important thing that we ever teach will be how to fall down – that's how to fail, literally and figuratively," May said.

Greg May runs the Circus Camp that Greenbelt welcomes back this summer for the first time since 2019.

"Our goal overall is to create a loving, family atmosphere where kids can grow and learn: learn how to fall, but also learn how to get back up."

As kids get older, May noted, the lessons in perseverance they learn in Circus Camp help them in other areas of their lives, too. "When the kids square off with a three-month project in their sophomore year of high school," May said, "and they think, 'How can I handle something that's going to take three months?' The circus kids are going to say, 'Well, it took me a year and a half to learn a unicycle, so I can get this.'"

Another lesson May focuses on in Circus Camp is leading with kindness.

"When we did our sessions before, we always sat the kids down and told them that there were 100 rules for circus camp," May says. "Rules one through 99 were to be kind, and rule 100 was no gum."

Anatomy of a Comeback

May credits Cherry for making his return to Circus Camp

PGCPS Presents New Plan to Move Dora Kennedy Back to Goddard

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Monday, March 11, Prince George's County Public School (PGCPS) leaders met in person with the Dora Kennedy French Immersion (DKFI) community for the first time for a town hall meeting about plans to move the school from its current location off Edmonston Road and Greenbelt Road, in what was Greenbelt's original high school building. The community learned they were being moved from their building when the News Review reported it on February 1. Since then, PGCPS held a virtual meeting in which participants were not able to speak, telling the DKFI community that the only option available for their school was a move to the former Kenmoor Middle School in Landover (vacated last year when that school got a new building). On Monday they announced their new plan to move DKFI back to its former location, sharing the Robert Goddard school building in Lanham with the Montessori school. The administration presented the move as solving problems for DKFI and the system but parents objected to a second plan created without their input.

Apologies

PGCPS Chief Operating Of-

Dora Kennedy French Immersion School Principal James Spence, left, and Robert Goddard Montessori School Principal Deatrice Womack speak at Monday's town hall held to discuss the future move of the school.

ficer Charoscar Coleman presided over the town hall, and said the administrative team had come to "do the work to repair and restore the relationship between the administration and the Dora Kennedy community" and to "collaboratively move forward." Coleman opened by apologizing for the "distraction" caused by the "hot mic moment" (see the February 15 issue).

PGCPS Director of the Blueprint Schools Program Shawn Matlock also apologized for his comments made during the "hot mic." Matlock had said of DKFI and Robert Goddard Montessori (RGMS) schools that "they hate each other!" On Monday, he explained he is prone to hyperbole and knows the families and administrations of the schools do not have "any animosity toward

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Over a month after Laura Shallue went missing she has been found and safely reunited with family.

On Tuesday, March 12, Maryland State Police (MSP) told the News Review, "We can confirm that Shallue was located happy and healthy yesterday evening. No foul play is suspected. No additional information is available at this time."

Shallue, 54, of Stevensville on the Eastern Shore, was located March 11 after being reported missing on February 6. She had been reportedly last seen by an aunt in Greenbelt and said to be heading to Greenbelt Lake before going missing. Her car was found on Lastner Lane on February 8 with her cellphone inside.

As previously reported by the News Review, Buddy Attick Park was searched by MSP and supporting agencies on foot and with dogs on Wednesday, February 21 and the lake was searched using boats, dogs and sonar on Monday, February 26 (see the February 29 issue).

A Strange Disappearance

The missing-person case was transferred from Maryland's Centerville Barracks to MSP Criminal Enforcement Division (CED). While she was missing, CED declined to respond to questions from the News Review about Shallue's use of credit cards or access to money, the last time she used the phone that was found in her car or whether she was thought to have been at Greenbelt Lake during daylight hours or evening ones. They did tell the News Review that investigators did not believe foul play was suspected.

Letters to the Editor

A Modest Proposal

It is a melancholy thought to those who live and work in this great town, when they see city hall, crowded with filing cabinets, followed by three, four or six meager offices, all in bleak concrete walls and space consultants recommending taxpayers pay for a new building.

It seems agreed by all parties of city council, consultants and staff that a large and long-term debt to construct a new building to house city services is the only way to improve the deplorable state of city hall. Could the city be required to report on lessons from the bond to fund and costs to construct the public works facility completed in 2009 for $4.2 million (GNR, 31 Dec 2009)?

Based on letters to the newspaper, I will throw my hat in with the taxpayers who find it worthwhile to seek out a fair, cheap and immediate method to provide physical space to support city services.

Instead of indenturing future city residents with potential cost and time overruns of a complex construction project, the city could pivot. It could rent space in existing Greenbelt office buildings, rapidly resolving the space needs of city staff and services while supporting area businesses. The new first floor tenants of 6301 Ivy Lane have created a stylish and welcoming suite in a few short weeks. It seems hard to imagine how construction of an entirely new building would be less costly than even a 10-year commercial lease.

My Experience In Charlestowne North

It was with great pleasure that I read in the February 7 issue of the Greenbelt News Review that Freddie Mac had filed for foreclosure and receivership against Charlestowne North Holding LLC and learned from my former neighbors at Charlestowne North Apartments that the receiver had already started taking steps to remediate the damage caused by the neglect of the previous

Dune: Part Two

Continuing the Dune saga, the film explores the mythic journey of Paul Atreides (Timothée Chalamet) as he unites with Chani (Zendaya) and the Fremen while on a warpath of revenge against the conspirators who destroyed his family. Facing a choice between the love of his life and the fate of the known universe, he endeavors to prevent a terrible future only he can foresee. An incredible sci-fi epic – it well surpasses the first part and achieves on every level. “This might be the best sci-fi film we’ve had in many years and will likely be one of the best films of the year,” said Paul Salfen of AFMF Magazine.

Oppenheimer

Physicist J. Robert Oppenheimer (Cillian Murphy) works with a team of scientists to develop the atomic bomb. Also starring Emily Blunt, Matt Damon, Robert Downey Jr., Kenneth Branagh and Florence Pugh. The film won 2024 Oscars for Best Picture, Best Director (Christopher Nolan), Best Actor (Cillian Murphy) and Best Supporting Actor (Robert Downey, Jr.). Writer-Director Paul Schrader (Taxi Driver, Raging Bull and Last Temptation of Christ), writing on Facebook, says the Christopher Nolan film is the “best, most important film of this century. If you see one film in cinemas this year, it should be Oppenheimer.”

Poor Things

From filmmaker Yorgos Lanthimos and producer Emma Stone comes the incredible tale and fantastical evolution of Bella Baxter (Stone), a young woman brought back to life by the brilliant and unorthodox scientist Dr. Godwin Baxter (Willem Dafoe). Under Baxter’s protection, Bella is eager to learn. Hungry for the worldliness she is lacking, Bella runs off with Duncan Wedderburn (Mark Ruffalo), a slick and debauched lawyer, on a whirlwind adventure across the continents. Free from the prejudices of her times, Bella grows steadfast in her purpose to stand for equality and liberation. Stone won a 2024 Best Actress Oscar for her role.

Howl’s Moving Castle

In this film from master animator Hayao Miyazaki, Sophie (Emily Mortimer) has an uneventful life at her late father’s hat shop, but all that changes when she befriends wizard Howl (Christian Bale), who lives in a magical flying castle. However, the evil Witch of Waste (Lauren Bacall) takes issue with their budding relationship and casts a spell on young Sophie, which ages her prematurely. Now Howl must use all his magical talents to battle the jealous hag and return Sophie to her former youth and beauty.

Midnight Cowboy

Convinced of his irresistible appeal to women, Texas dishwasher Joe Buck (Jon Voight) quits his job and heads for New York City, thinking he’ll latch on to some rich dowager. New York, however, is not as hospitable as he imagined, and Joe soon finds himself living in an abandoned building with a Dickensian layabout named Enrico “Ratso” Rizzo (Dustin Hoffman). The two form a rough alliance, and together they kick-start Joe’s hustling career just as Ratso’s health begins to deteriorate.

Helen E. White

Helen Emily White (née Bryan) died at the age of 88 on March 5, 2024, in her Greenbelt home with family by her side. She was born on March 2, 1936, to Florence E. and John H. Bryan in Chicago. The Bryan family moved to Washington, D.C., in the 1940s where they lived on the 1800 block of Newton Street N.W. in the Mt. Pleasant neighborhood. Helen graduated from Sacred Heart Academy where she was active in the Catholic Youth Organization (CYO) women's basketball league. She met her husband Thomas X. White at a local CYO dance in 1952. The two married in 1956, raised seven children and were together for nearly 60 years until his death in 2015.

In 1959 the family moved to Greenbelt, with Helen working night shifts at the Government Printing Office to spend daytime hours with their toddler children as Tom completed his degree at the University of Maryland. Her boundless energy and initiative enabled her to balance motherhood, work and community activities. Before long she had put her expert stenography skills to use in a variety of roles supporting Greenbelt Homes, Inc. and Greenbelt Consumer Services. Helen and Tom quickly realized Greenbelt was the perfect place for them, and went on to build a wonderful life around their strong values of faith, family, community engagement and volunteerism. They were heavily involved in the local Catholic parish of St. Hugh's where their children attended the parochial school. Helen loved coaching the girls' basketball team at St. Hugh's in the 1970s and served as a parent sponsor of a neighborhood 4-H group (with a reputation for her baking and sewing talents). Always an advocate for active learning, Helen offered her administrative and accounting skills to the local Eleanor Pernia Dance Studio in exchange for dance lessons for her children. She was a resourceful DIY personality who found time and energy to sew clothes for her children and take on projects ranging from home remodeling to garden landscaping to auto repairs. In 1985, Helen

Blueprint or Budget-breaker? Maryland's Education Reform

by Kiersten Hacker, Christina Walker and Ela Jali

Behind the Blueprint is the Local News Network's comprehensive report on the Blueprint for Maryland's Future, the 10-year, multibillion-dollar plan to remake public education in the state. This article, the first of a two-part series, looks at how the Blueprint for Maryland's Future came to be and its impact on the state's budget.

Blueprint. State Deficit

The Blueprint for Maryland is estimated to cost millions from the state's coffers in coming years. At the same time, the State Department of Legislative Services anticipates growing deficits in the structural budget. [Note: A structural budget is one adjusted for one-offs in revenue or expenditure to provide a medium-term outlook.]

Maryland's Democratic-led legislature passed the Blueprint for Maryland's Future in 2021, vowing to pour billions of dollars into the state's public schools to offer universal pre-K, improve teaching and make sure students are ready for college or careers.

But the General Assembly didn't outline a long-term plan to fund the ambitious 10-year education reform effort, which increasingly looks like a blueprint for red ink.

Diving deep into the reform plan in reporting Behind the Blueprint – a multipart look at the state effort – the Local News Network at the University of Maryland found that the Blueprint is already devouring hundreds of millions annually from the state's fund balance, which is on target to be fully drained in 2027. [Note: The fund balance is the balance available for appropriation and expenditure after revenues and expenditures have been accounted for.]

According to a state Department of Legislative Services fiscal briefing released in January, the state will start running a structural deficit in Fiscal Year 2025 that will multiply nearly sixfold by Fiscal Year 2029, when it will hit $2.93 billion. [Note: A structural deficit is one in which public spending exceeds revenues even in good circumstances such as a strong economy. It reflects a chronic problem that will need changes in revenue, such as taxation, or in spending to address.] Not coincidentally, that fiscal briefing estimates implementing the Blueprint will cost more than $4 billion in 2029.

The General Assembly's plan for dealing with the cost crunch? There isn't one, at least not yet. Neither Governor Wes Moore in his State of the State address nor any of the Democratic state legislators interviewed for this story have offered any potential solutions for the coming Blueprint cash crunch.

"Several years from now we're going to have to have a much more direct conversation about the long-term costs," said state Senate President Bill Ferguson, a Democrat from Baltimore City. "But we're not there yet."

Republicans, meanwhile, see the Blueprint as a budget-breaker.

"We cannot pay these billions and billions of dollars in extra monies; not just state but local as well," said House Minority Leader Jason Buckel (R-Allegany). "We can't pay for them unless you're going to talk about new taxes – and significant taxes."

The Blueprint's Background

Ironically, the Blueprint was born out of a commission supported by a Republican governor who later backed away from the plan because of cost concerns.

In 2016, then-Governor Larry Hogan and the General Assembly created the Commission on Innovation and Excellence in Education to assess the public education system in Maryland and determine whether current funding schemes were conducive to student success.

Headed by William Kirwan, the former chancellor of the University System of Maryland, the commission came to the conclusion that an overhaul was needed.

"One of the 'aha' moments of each other." He also apologized for saying that DKFI was not a school and explained that he was thinking in terms of brick-and-mortar schools and financing. "You are a school," he told the families, teachers and administrators gathered on Monday.

History

Coleman said that 10 years ago DKFI's current building was slated for demolition, but PGCPs spent $5.7 million to make it habitable for the school. Prior to that, DKFI and RGMS were co-located at the Robert Goddard school off Good Luck Road in Lanham. PGCPs' plan was to send DKFI to the Greenbelt building (vacated by Greenbelt Middle School) and send RGMS to Meadowbrook Elementary School in Bowie. It would move the schools to right-sized locations and open the Robert Goddard building as a middle-school-sized swing space for the county, he explained. (A swing space is a location to temporarily house displaced schools.) RGMS fought the plan and ultimately PGCPs reversed the decision to move them. "That hampered us as a school district," said Coleman, who explained that PGCPs was left without a viable middle school swing space. It became a clear problem when Hyattsville Middle School had to spread over three locations in Berwyn Heights, Bowie and Lanham during the pandemic, he said. "That was not a good outcome for the families, the staff nor us in operations," and it was "one of the first bad decisions I was referencing," said Coleman, referring to the comment he made on February 12 about "doubling down on a bad decision." The other bad decision would be moving DKFI to the only middle-school-sized swing space that remains in the entire school district: Kenmoor, which was vacated last year.

Need to Move DKFI

"We are going to have to move Dora Kennedy," stated Coleman, definitively. Their building is over 10 years past its useful life, he said, stressing also that the administration had been working hard to find options for DKFI beyond the single option presented to the community previously, which was a move to Kenmoor.

Historic Site?

A feasibility study conducted 15 years ago determined DKFI's current building should be torn down, shared Matlock. (Note: this study was conducted before DKFI was moved into the building.) He also shared that all capital funding for the next six years is already earmarked. "The final use of this facility will be two years of swing space for Springhill Lake Elementary School, after which non-historic portions will be decommissioned and/or the building transferred to the City of Greenbelt," he shared in a slide presentation. Matlock said if the building wasn't surplus back to Greenbelt, then PGCPs would demolish it and place it back in the portfolio as a site for a new school in the future, probably not for some 30 or more years. [Note: at its meeting on February 26 the Greenbelt City Council requested a historic site evaluation of the school building.]

Plan to Reunite

Robert Goddard is now a bigger school space, said Matlock, referring to 10 modular classrooms that have been added to the grounds. Matlock then presented a plan that would move DKFI permanently to Robert Goddard in 2026. Hyattsville Elementary School, previously scheduled to move to Robert Goddard as a swing space in 2026, will instead go to the St. Mark's School from 2025 to 2027, which will be rented from the Archdiocese for the two years before Hyattsville Elementary receives its new school. Matlock spoke of upgraded windows, doors, Wi-Fi, a "full facelift," a new sprinkler system and added classrooms, an elevator and plans to expand the Robert Goddard building further to fit DKFI in 2026.

DKFI's Principal James Spence thanked the community. He spoke of visions and partnerships with NASA and the University of Maryland and appreciation for the Greenbelt community and what it has done for the school. Spence joked about the competitiveness between DKFI and RGMS and he thanked Principal Deatrice Womack for opening the doors of Robert Goddard and allowing him to see what the potential could be.

Womack explained that the building is split between two schools and common spaces such as the cafeteria are shared. She said a key component to sharing space is the scheduling of events and space usage, as well as arrival and dismissal procedures. "Two programs, one building – it can work. It can work," said Womack, referring to all the schools RGMS has shared the building with, since half of it has been used as a swing space. "We've done it ... We did it and we did it with grace and with collaboration with each other," she said. "Pretty much I'm here to say that we welcome you."

Community Responds

Following the administrators' comments and presentation, parents and community members were invited to speak. Many expressed deep dissatisfaction that a new plan had been made for DKFI again without input from the community, and before their opportunity to talk to administrators. Though one parent said she "couldn't get out of the building fast enough," many others asked why a plan for DKFI wasn't part of the budget 10 years ago; whether their children would be housed in temporary buildings; if DKFI, which has been growing, could continue to do so;

and whether they could maintain their identity in a shared space. Lee Wright, a former parent and current administrator at DKFI, who has been part of the school since it was at Rogers Heights, recalled that the second year co-located at Robert Goddard, DKFI returned from summer break to find their principal had been removed and the Montessori principal was to serve both, as one school. She said they were not allowed to make announcements over the PA in French and the program was "watered down." Wright said she'd seen the huge difference in the program when they had their own space and a "sole French program." "I don't personally relish the thought of going back over to Robert Goddard because we kind of have a history of being treated like the bald stepchild," said Wright. "I'm an advocate for us to be in our own space," she told the administrators. "I understand that you can't pull space out of thin air and everything costs a lot of money. I just hope that every avenue is truly explored, other buildings, other spaces."

An article in next week's paper will provide more on the community members' testimony and responses to the move.

The author is the parent of two children who currently attend Dora Kennedy French Immersion.

Enrollment

PGCPs' official enrollment data, accessed by the News Review, shows for the current school year a total enrollment of 492 students at RGMS (463 total adjusted for half-day 3-year-olds) and a 46 percent utilization of their building space, which has a space-rated capacity of 998, leaving 535 seats available. Meanwhile, the same enrollment data, taken on September 30, 2023, shows DKFI this school year has a total enrollment of 680 students. There is no building utilization data available for their school.

City Manager Provides Financial Update at Council Worksession

by Madeleine Jepsen

On January 29, City Manager Josué Salmerón provided a quarterly financial update at the city council worksession. The city's financial condition is stable, with city revenue coming in faster than expenditures are being paid out, wrote city Treasurer Bertha Gaymon in a memo to council.

City Manager Josué Salmerón provides a quarterly financial update at the city council worksession.

Salmerón, who joined the staff in September, provided his second quarterly update to the council. The city's general fund revenue will likely exceed the adopted budget of $36,082,900 for Fiscal Year (FY) 2024, which ends June 30, and expenditures will also be lower than the budget, continuing the trend the city saw in the previous two fiscal years.

At the time of the meeting, the city had collected 76.6 percent of budgeted revenues, or $27,624,005, which exceeds the expected revenues. The city, on track with expected costs, has spent about 59.3 percent of its budgeted expenses, or $21,386,961 of the $36,046,700 budgeted.

"There's been a lot of things we're doing, a lot of attention on Greenbelt and the success and the things that we've accomplished," Salmerón said, adding that last quarter, the city received the 2023 Excellence in Economic Development Silver Award from the International Economic Development Council for the city's community development work through grant funding.

Salmerón commended the Public Works Department, responsible for a variety of tasks ranging from sidewalk repair to street cleaning and waste collection. Since a large portion of the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funding has gone toward public works-related capital projects, Acting Director of Public Works Brian Kim explained the department's tiered approach to project management.

The Human Resources Department is reviewing personnel policies and has digitized all current employee files and fully implemented the compensation study, an effort to ensure Greenbelt employees are paid competitive wages compared to other municipalities and the city can retain talented employees, said Salmerón. "That's actually going to have a pretty big impact on our budget in the coming year," said Mayor Emmett Jordan.

"The takeaway here is that we brought in more revenue than projected at this point in time and we expect our revenues to come in higher than budgeted," Salmerón said. "Likewise, for expenses, our spending is currently on track, but we expected to spend less than what we budgeted. Now, though, I'll put an asterisk as to that, that conditions

Salmerón called it "an early estimate of where our revenues and expenses will be for 2025." He is working with the finance department to deliver a balanced budget to council on March 25, he said. "That's part of the next year's budget so we're not facing that deficit this year," said Salmerón, who emphasized he'd rather be conservative on revenues and come in higher than budgeted and lower than estimated on expenses.

Public Information

The city's Public Information Office includes streaming services with Facebook and YouTube to expand its reach to Greenbelt constituents and distributes emails to a listserv with more than 16,000 email addresses, as well as a quarterly postal mailer sent to about 13,000 addresses. Discussion included making the city's website more user-friendly and incorporating translation in the budget for FY 2025.

Economic Development

In terms of the Economic Development Department, ARPA funds have been used to support small businesses, including 13 grants totaling $345,000 for business improvement and recovery, as well as seven grants totaling $280,000 for the business capital infrastructure program. Salmerón said more grant payments are designated to go out to Greenbelt businesses. The department is also creating a Greenbelt business directory and will deploy $250,000 in ARPA funds for business support and develop a $100,000 ARPA-funded business resiliency campaign, which will include increasing the foot traffic to the small businesses in Roosevelt Center. The department plans to continue an ARPA-funded "earn as you learn" program that provides hands-on job training for 16- to 18-year-olds in the next fiscal year.

As for planning, council also discussed the Royal Farms project, which council opposed but was approved by Prince George's County, and the Toaping Castle may change in the next five, six months, and we have to be prepared to make adjustments as needed. But we are prepared."

The city's budget for FY 2025 will be based on Greenbelt's budget and progress for FY 2024. Real estate taxes are the largest revenue source for the city, which has collected all but $50,000 of the 2024 budgeted amount. For personal property taxes, the city has collected about the same amount this year as in FY 2023. Gaymon pointed out that state highway revenue may be reduced in FY 2024 and FY 2025, although the full revenue may still be collected. The Recreation Department has nearly returned to its pre-Covid revenue levels after several years of lower revenue generated during the pandemic.

Since revenue numbers can fluctuate from year to year, Gaymon presented a five-year historical average for the city to use as an index. Jordan voiced concerns about open retail space in Greenway Center and Beltway Plaza, and the potential for lower commercial property taxes if fewer businesses renew their leases post-pandemic.

Deficit Next Year

Resident Leon Schachter told council he clearly remembered the city manager previously stating there was a $2.5 million deficit and he had heard the mayor advise that the state plans to cut their funding to municipalities by eight percent. "What happened to the two-and-a-half million dollars that was supposed to be a deficit? It looks like you're running a surplus. So, what happened?" he asked. Jordan clarified that there is a deficit of $2.6 million projected for the coming budget but not the current fiscal year.

Prince George's Philharmonic Performs Again in Greenbelt

by Susan Pearl

The Prince George's Philharmonic will return to Greenbelt, performing the fifth concert of its 58th season at the Eleanor Roosevelt High School auditorium on Saturday, March 23, beginning at 7:30 p.m. The Philharmonic has not performed in Greenbelt for eight years, having last performed here in February 2016. The March 23 program will highlight American composers and will include major works by Aaron Copland, Charles Ives and Howard Hanson.

Copland's original Appalachian Spring ballet, composed in 1943-44 for Martha Graham and her dance company, premiered in October 1944 in the Library of Congress auditorium. (The orchestra that accompanied the dancers consisted of only 13 instruments, the largest number that could comfortably fit into the pit.) In 1945, Copland then took part of the original ballet music and scored it for full orchestra, which has become immensely popular. It is this full orchestra version that will be performed on March 23.

Ives originally wrote symphony 3, which won a Pulitzer Prize in 1908-10, as three pieces for organ: a prelude, a postlude and a piece for communion – all based on Ives' memories of his rural youth and the outdoor camp meetings where all the farm families would come from miles around, and Ives' father, a Civil War bandmaster, led the singing. Ives structured his third symphony around these three organ pieces, each of the three movements depicting one of the hymns from a camp meeting: Old Folks Gatherin', Children's Day and Communion.

Hanson's Symphony 2 was premiered in 1930 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO), commissioned by Serge Koussevitsky for the 50th anniversary of the BSO. The symphony is in three movements rather than the expected four movements (a form established by Haydn and continued well into the 20th century). The best known and most loved of Hanson's works, this symphony's often gorgeous romantic lyricism makes it beloved by audiences who might otherwise lean away from 20th-century music.

Tickets for the concert will be sold at the door – they're discounted for seniors and free for those age 18 and under. See the ad on page 13 for details. For any questions, call 301-446-3245.

happen. May's mother, Betty, died last June. She had been a theater teacher and playwright and had helped her son run Circus Camp in Greenbelt. When trying to wrap up his mother's estate, May called Cherry and offered to donate the props and theater equipment at her home.

Cherry was glad to help, but also told May that Greenbelt would love for him to come back and do Circus Camp. For May, the suggestion led to a set of opposing emotions. First, having recently lost his mother, he yearned for something familial.

"Of all the places of work, of all the things I've done over the years, I've never felt more of a family atmosphere than at the Community Center, with the team there, and with the community there," he said.

At the same time, the reality that May isn't as young as he was when he first started doing the camp set in, too. "I said, 'I don't know,' because it's so unbelievably physically taxing – basically lifting kids for a living," May said.

Cherry wasn't pushy, but offered May some words of assurance. "He says 'We'll start out small,' and 'we'll make sure to have some young, strong staffers there to help,'" May said of Cherry's supportive offer.

May also learned from Cherry that, over the years, as children who'd done the camps had grown up and outgrown their unicycles or other circus equipment, they'd donated them to the Community Center. "It's all just there and ready to rock and roll," May said. With that in mind, May agreed to come back.

PORCH Food Pickup Schedule for March

Greenbelt PORCH collects donations of nonperishables and hygiene products and brings them to the St. Hugh's Food Pantry. Donations must be placed by front doors in containers marked RUAK or PORCH visible from the street. The pantry cannot accept open containers or food that has expired. The March schedule is below:

Sunday, March 24 – by 4 p.m. for 9 through 13 Courts Ridge Road; by 5 p.m. for Lakeside Drive.

Anyone with questions or who is interested in being a volunteer or starting a new neighborhood for monthly food collection with Greenbelt PORCH, email Goldberg-Strassler at spreadruak@gmail.com.

Greg May runs the Circus Camp that Greenbelt is welcoming back this summer after a four-year hiatus.

What's in Store?

This year's Circus Camp will look a lot like those in previous years. Participants will learn juggling, unicycle and clowning skills. Equipment like rolla bolla, a board balanced on top of a tube; the rolling globe, a large ball students stand or walk on as it rolls beneath them; and stilts will be back.

However, the camp will not be doing aerial skills, as that requires the most physicality from instructors, who have to make sure students don't fall and get hurt. Additionally, Circus Camp is being offered one week over spring break, and only for three of the nine weeks Greenbelt is offering camps this summer: a single full, two-week session in July and a one-week session in August.

"I want to keep everybody safe," May said. "I want to be on the absolute top of my game mentally and physically. We're going to start out with these smaller sessions to give me a chance to recover afterwards because nothing is more important to me than being able to put my all into it."

Cherry is happy to have May back for these few sessions, noting his "Greenbelt homecoming is both joyful and poignant."

May is equally happy, noting that performing and helping others with circus is "like the air in my lungs. I love it with a passion." He adds that he's also really looking forward to being with his Greenbelt family again.

"When Chris put the bug in my ear about it, the more I thought about it, the more it felt right," May says. "It really comes down to, I could use some family time."

progressive causes. All of this, she says, gave her a real appreciation for local government and the work it does. It also jibes with the intentionality of how she and her family – husband Nelson and their two teenage sons, Oscar and Miles – live their lives. They understand it's important to be involved and engaged, she says of her family. Pompei believes you have to be intentional about being involved in things, about making connections.

"If you want to be a part of a community, you have to be intentional and build that community. You can't just drop in and have community exist around you ... I think this is the way to live your life."

But as involved as Pompei was in the community, it was a hard decision to pursue a seat on council. Yes, she and her family are busy, but she had also suffered what she described as a devastating loss in 2022 when running for the Prince George's County School Board. Yet it was the many people who approached her after that loss and encouraged her to run for council that made her seriously consider it.

Pompi admits to being terrified of running another campaign. However, there were so many who were supportive – people like Jordan and Gordon – that she felt like there could be a place for her on council and that there was more work she could do. Though she lost the school board race, that first campaign likely gave her a small advantage over the other nonincumbents.

"Greenbelters already knew that I was here and present in the community, that I knew the issues, that I cared," she said.

Still, Pompei admits to being in complete disbelief that she had done so well in the election. She expected to come in seventh or not win a seat at all, but, she said, "People had connected with me through the course of that [first School Board] campaign and recognized how important it is to serve and work hard."

Pompi says that after being a careful observer for so many years, it feels wonderful to have a literal seat at the table now, be able to shape policy and have a direct effect on the community.

"I'm able to connect in a different way," she says. "And people connect with me differently now, too. Greenbelters are very civic minded. Community members want there to be an awareness of the work they're doing and the things they're passionate about in the city."

So, what does she care about and prioritize now that she's a council member? Noncitizen resident voting and increasing environmental sustainability within our green spaces are two issues she's passionate about. On the former, Pompei will consider her term a success if all Greenbelt residents are given the right to vote. On the latter, Pompei wants to continue addressing invasive species, maintaining biodiversity and protecting species critical to maintaining a sustainable ecosystem. Although there's much work to do, specifically on communication and education around these issues, Pompei is heartened that many in Greenbelt are already working on these initiatives.

On the former, Pompei will consider her term a success if all Greenbelt residents are given the right to vote. On the latter, Pompei wants to continue addressing invasive species, maintaining biodiversity and protecting species critical to maintaining a sustainable ecosystem. Although there's much work to do, specifically on communication and education around these issues, Pompei is heartened that many in Greenbelt are already working on these initiatives.

"Greenbelt is ripe to be a community in which we value sustainability ... and where we all work together towards it."

And this includes all of Greenbelt, Pompei says. Equity is key and maintaining the status quo is not necessarily the answer, Pompei adds.

"For some, Greenbelt has a history that is painful and hurtful." Pompei is mindful of this and advises that the Reparations Committee will play a big part in how we move forward as a community.

Pompi says that more is needed by both council and the city to reach different areas of Greenbelt. Whether that is through meetings or worksessions in Greenbelt West or Greenbelt East, Pompei believes that you need to go where the people are to increase involvement. Pompei has no interest in dictating to others and, instead, she wants each distinct community to communicate its needs and for council to help meet them.

Pompi is also aware of the different dynamics of the current council and the difference that may make in how things are done. Unlike in recent years, all council members have full-time jobs, and women are the majority, two members with children at home. This changes the way people work, she says. There's simply less time in the day.

"Every minute that I'm at my job or at council is a minute I'm not with my family. So, I have to be working really hard with that time. I want that time to be extremely effective for the city and get the most done we can ... People want to see action, they want to see things happen and they are hoping that this council is going to be a council of action, which I do, too."

Join the MeatOut Challenge

by Barbara Glick and Geraldine Adams

On March 11, Mayor Emmett Jordan issued a proclamation, joining the Prince George's County Council in declaring March 20, 2024, as MeatOut day. The county council cites "the variety of chronic health conditions related to diet" that county residents face as one of the reasons for embracing MeatOut day.

In order to spread the word about the benefits of a plant-based diet, early organizers selected March 20, 1985, as the first MeatOut day. Over the last 39 years, cities all around the U.S. and the world have been observing MeatOut day. According to the animal advocacy group FARM, MeatOut is now one of the largest international grassroots educational campaigns dedicated to removing animal products from our plates.

Why Is It Important?

An ever-growing number of scientific studies have demonstrated the adverse health effects of the consumption of animal products. An exclusively whole-food plant-based diet is recommended by many healthcare practitioners. In 2015 the World Health Organization declared that processed meats are Group 1 carcinogens, meaning they cause cancer in humans.

The factory farm system, or concentrated animal feeding operations, that provide consumers with their meat, dairy and eggs are major contributors to greenhouse gas emissions and groundwater pollution. The growing demand for these products has been known to lead to deforestation, global warming and human rights violations while disproportionately affecting low-income communities and communities of color.

Participate in MeatOut

The Greenbelt Co-op offers many plant-based options and will host cooking demonstrations by Food for Life instructor and Greenbelt resident Geraldine Adams on Monday, March 18 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

All Greenbelters are invited to take the challenge and make it fun. Participants are encouraged to recruit a friend, family member or co-worker and take the MeatOut +1 challenge or do it on their own.

Plan one plant-based breakfast, lunch and dinner to be ready for the challenge. For breakfast, try some quick oatmeal with nut milk, diced apples and cinnamon. For lunch, try tacos or a taco salad made with beans, plant-based meat and cheese. For dinner, prepare a small salad with penne pasta in marinara sauce with tofu or chickpeas. Tasty, nutritious and easy-to-make plant-based meals can be found at MeatOut.org or PCRM.org/recipes.

Post Meat-free Meals

Post your meals on your social media pages and tag them #MeatOut.

Another way to learn more is to watch a film about plant-based eating, such as Forks over Knives, What the Health or The Twins Study: You Are What You Eat.

The Tower Bus Film Focuses On History of Desegregation

by Melissa Sites

A large crowd came to Greenbelt Cinema on February 29 to watch The Tower Road Bus and to tell their own stories around desegregation. Directed by Michael Streissguth, the 2021 documentary focused on busing at an elementary school in Prince George's County in the early 1970s. To lead the discussion, a three-member panel included Avis Matthews, a teacher and historian who has researched and written about African-American identity, along with Robert Spencer and Brenda Hawkins Baker, who were bused as children from their homes along Tower Road in Brandywine to Crestview Elementary School.

One audience member asked, "Do you think it's important these stories are still told, or should we 'move on'?" Spencer replied, "We all need to talk about history." Matthews agreed: "I'm a history teacher, so yes. How can you raise your children and not tell them about their grandparents or their aunts and uncles? What can they connect to? We stand on our history."

Matthews stressed that everybody's story is not the same, and audience members related their different perspectives. One person stated, "Being bused from North-western to High Point was very traumatizing and destructive. I sent my children to private school so they could control their education." Matthews said, "Busing was not destructive for me. There are African American communities all over Prince George's County. I wanted to find out how people were racially proud: how did we affirm our racial identity when we were desegregated? It was through community ties and family ties. Continuity was important. Racial identity was important, even though for the most part we integrated fairly well." Matthews' sister spoke about her own experience. "Being bused out of a school with Black teachers to a school with all white teachers was traumatizing," she said. The sisters agreed that each of the four siblings in their family had different experiences, even over the span of just a few years. Spencer said that while all his friends went to one school, he was bused to a different school. "The experience has a lot to do with the numbers. When you were in that small minority it was very difficult."

Dwayne Brown, local filmmaker, stated, "Glenarden was a well-built middle class Black town. Busing was a shock." He experienced racism at schools where he was bused, including at Eleanor Roosevelt. He achieved his goal of becoming a filmmaker despite being told by a counselor that he couldn't. "Luckily my mother was a teacher," he said. "We were able to get the resources that the white students had."

One audience member from New York experienced a lack of equity, driving her to become an elementary school principal. "My saving grace was that my community was strong. My grandmother was an activist. I was proud of who I was, but I got in a lot of trouble," she said. A teaching artist in the audience pointed out that while today's schools acknowledge the need for psychological and social support systems, those resources were largely absent back then though, as Matthews pointed out, teachers with positive attitudes could make an important impact.

Another person asked, "Would integration have happened if it were not compelled by the courts?" Most responses around the auditorium pointed to heavy resistance to integration. Dr. Alvin Thornton, accomplished educator at Howard University and three-term chair of the Prince George's Board of Education, remarked, "We're now wrestling with the issue of how to move forward, informed by historical awareness."

Summing up, Spencer said, "It's good to see Blacks and whites come together. The most powerful word is love. Teach your kids love instead of hate." Matthews said, "There is not one history. Everyone has perspectives. Make sure our children know that. Ask that person what happened from their perspective." Baker closed the event by saying, "Never judge a book by its cover, and love one another."

Parlez-Vous Français Is a Fun, Friendly, Francophone Frolic

par Cathie Meetre

The French group that meets at the New Deal Café weekly on Thursdays from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. is a delight. Participants range from native speakers with wide vocabularies and a full range of accent and expression, to relative neophytes planning a trip to France and trying to learn how to be polite. Vocabularies, grammar and accent are distributed unevenly (and sometimes amusingly) among the group, and enthusiasm and the willingness to speak out are the key to advancing in the language. The atmosphere is so embracing and elastic that even those who are shy can feel unjudged and comfortable in participating. Just because it's a verb doesn't mean it has to be conjugated correctly; just spit it out in whatever form pops up — things can only get better.

How It Works

Each week, participants receive an email with a topic decided by the group for the week ahead. Those of recent weeks have included wines, New Year's resolutions and things that are fun to do in winter. Participants who are fluent can hold forth on the spot — but researching and writing out a little speech ahead of time and reading it from paper is not considered cheating as it helps the speaker explore and develop the language. Having a written prompt also removes some of the pressure of giving a short speech in an alien tongue. Of course, when the born Francophones speak, everybody gets an earful of how it should sound — a great help.

Peer Coaching

The more expert speakers are also a major resource to the less fluent, assisting with words and grammatical constructions and modeling accent and the body language key to expression without any sense of judgment or superiority. While the group is not perhaps an opportunity for rapid and at-home-feeling conversation with other native French-speakers, it is hopefully a rewarding experience for the fluent to be helping others enjoy the beauty of the French language.

Cultural Exchange

Apart from widening the command of French, spoken and receptive, the group is also an opportunity to learn about the culture of France. For example, a recent explanation by an actual real Frenchman on the difference of wine labeling between the U.S. and France explained that the U.S. labeling emphasizes the grape while the French labeling emphasizes the region. Who knew? He was even complimentary of one of the Maryland-grown reds as being in the same class as its French counterpart (and available from the Co-op).

Skill Levels

Participant backgrounds vary. Apart from the French expatriates, some have lived in France or a French-speaking country for periods of time, some have a French-speaking parent and grew up bilingual but in the U.S. Others studied French in high school or college, often many years ago, and want to reclaim and improve the skill.

Chez le Café

The New Deal Café imparts a reminiscent café flavor to the event — one can imagine une petite brasserie on a Parisian boulevard — and the speakers are able to fortify themselves with un verre de vin and a bowl of most excellent chili or perhaps une petite salade. Sometimes, if the group is larger and the table longer, the background noise level makes it a little difficile to hear the person at the other end of the table. But then again, if it were the little Paris spot one imagines, there would be, sans doute, un buzz of animated conversation to contend with.

Where in the Café?

The table, always in the front room of the New Deal, can be found by the “Tricolore” flag dangling gaily from a small metal stand and perhaps the presence of un dictionnaire Français sur la table. As more speakers arrive, the group commandeers more tables — the last few meetings have had about eight to 10 persons attending. The group is informal and inclusive. Just show up.

City Responds to Recycling Questions Raised by Citizens

by Luisa Robles

This is a response to the February 29 letter by Randall Crenwelle, “Questions Recycling.”

The City of Greenbelt pays $27/ton to take recyclables to the MRF (Materials Recovery Facility), where materials are sorted, baled and sold by MES (Maryland Environmental Service) to be processed and made into other goods. The city pays $70/ton to take trash to the landfill where materials will forever linger and where organic matter decomposes and produces methane, a potent greenhouse gas.

If Greenbelt took the recyclable materials to the landfill, we would be paying more per ton. It is cheaper to recycle than to landfill.

The MRF is 11.5 miles from the Greenbelt Public Works facility. And the landfill is 12.5 miles away. Taking materials to the MRF uses less fuel too.

Point of clarification: the fee for trash and recycling collection is separate from your taxes here in Greenbelt. Different areas of the city are served by different contractors. Homeowners' associations choose who they want to work with. Depending on where you live, you may or may not be getting your trash and recycling collected by the city.

If only a small percentage of plastics produced are being recycled, the solution is not to stop recycling, but to make conscious purchases and avoid plastic packaging. Or make sure the packaging is recyclable (resin code inside chasing arrows # 1 through 5). Right now, it is cheaper to produce new plastic than to recycle, but that is due to the fact that the cost of new plastic does not include the negative externalities associated with its production.

The U.S. recycles about 32 percent of materials and Greenbelt recycles about 58 percent. We continuously strive to achieve a better recycling rate.

Everyone can help! Instead of tossing something out, think: can it be reused? Will someone in Buy Nothing Greenbelt like this? Freecycle? Thrift store? Community Fork Lift?

If not, is this recyclable? Compostable (be part of our pilot!)? Or is it “Special Recycling” such as electronics, Styrofoam, paint? (Bring it to our quarterly events.)

If not, is it hazardous waste? (If so, it needs to be taken to the county; do you need help from the Greenbelt Time Bank to get that done?)

Whatever you have left, after all those questions, goes in the trash, destined for the landfill.

Luisa Robles is the sustainability coordinator for the City of Greenbelt.

Luminis Receives $1.6M State Grant For Student Mental Health Services

In response to the increasing demand for mental health services among young people, Luminis Health has been awarded a $1.6 million grant from the Maryland Community Health Resources Commission. The nonprofit regional health system will collaborate with Prince George's County Public Schools by implementing comprehensive support services at six high schools, including Eleanor Roosevelt in Greenbelt and DuVal in Lanham.

As part of the grant, Luminis Health will hire and deploy mental health providers directly to the schools, collaborating with school counselors to offer vital support to students and parents. These embedded providers will rotate through the schools, providing education and training to students, parents and teachers in an effort to ensure access to evidence-based screening tools for identifying individual needs and strengths on an ongoing basis.

“Our mental health matters, and today's teenagers are grappling with a mental health crisis of unprecedented proportions,” said Dr. Aliya Jones, executive medical director of Behavioral Health at Luminis Health. “By partnering with school counselors, teachers, parents and students, we can build strong bonds and connect with teenagers, fostering an environment of support for their mental health well-being and facilitating their growth.”

Other aspects of Luminis' multifaceted approach to support students' mental well-being include training teachers to recognize warning signs of mental health issues and equipping them with the tools to provide appropriate support and referrals. Students will receive training on how to identify signs of distress in their classmates and provide effective peer support.

Over the next few months, Luminis Health will recruit team members to support the services funded by the grant, including clinicians, therapists, addiction counselors, nurse practitioners and registered nurses. The health system will begin working directly with school personnel in June, with plans to roll out the comprehensive services for students in the upcoming school year.

The grant will also cover extended hours at the Behavioral Health Urgent Care walk-in clinic at Luminis Health Doctors Community Medical Center, offering treatment for non-life-threatening mental health needs for individuals of all ages.

Welfare Check

On March 9 at 1:39 a.m. near 6420 Cherrywood Lane, a security guard was flagged down by a woman who did not know where she was or how she arrived there. Officers responded, and she advised that she was out with friends at a bar and, after a drink, she blacked out. On March 9 at 4:30 a.m. near Kenilworth Avenue and Crescent Road, a vehicle in the middle of the roadway was impeding traffic. The driver said he'd had a few alcoholic beverages because it was his birthday. After a field sobriety test, he was arrested on suspicion of DUI.

Fraud

On March 7 near 7700 Greenbrook Drive, a man answered an ad to purchase concert tickets, but once the money was sent, the seller no longer answered the phone. On March 8 near 6500 Lake Park Drive, a man was scammed when he tried to get a personal loan on the internet.

Theft

On March 4 near 446 Ridge Road, a package was delivered to a residence but went missing.

On March 5 at 8:23 a.m. near 5910 Greenbelt Road, four men wearing ski masks stole several items before fleeing. On March 6 at 6:06 p.m. near 6100 Greenbelt Road, a man was arrested and charged for stealing. On March 7 at 5:59 p.m. near 6000 Greenbelt Road, an employee saw a man leave the store with a backpack identical to his; later he realized his was missing from the break room. On March 10 at 11:39 a.m. near 5910 Greenbelt Road, a fleeing suspect was caught, and stolen items were retrieved.

Family members and friends expressed alarm and concern over Shallue's long disappearance, but her husband, Russell Shallue, filed for divorce while she was still missing. Court documents show his petition for divorce was filed on March 11, with the same address listed for both parties. A family member described Shallue as estranged from her husband for some time.

On Tuesday, March 12, Shallue was said to be resting and recovering, unharmed and happily reunited with her young daughter.

and Tom joined a core group of passionate Greenbelt neighbors to establish the Catholic Community of Greenbelt (a faith community she loved and cherished the rest of her life), yet still remained a dedicated member of the Ladies Sodality and Ladies of Charity at St. Hugh's. As her children finished school, Helen returned to work full-time for the Greenbelt Co-op and eventually Georgetown University's Medical School Faculty Practice until her retirement in 2000.

Helen lived life to the fullest, yet always made it her highest priority to be the present, listening, supportive mother/friend/grandmother – whenever and wherever needed. She and Tom developed a tremendous love of travel and curiosity about the strengths and challenges of communities around the world, a passion they imparted to their children and grandchildren. As family members spread well beyond Greenbelt, Helen welcomed the many travel opportunities they found in retirement, and sought to share those experiences. They organized dozens of unforgettable stateside and international trips with friends, extended family and the ever-increasing number of grandchildren to unique locations in Africa, India, Europe, Australia and New Zealand – resulting in many vivid, lasting memories that her family and friends will always hold close to our hearts.

Helen was preceded in death by her husband Tom, son Jim and brother Dave Bryan. She is survived by her sister Anne Nelson, six children: Bernadette (Marco Sandoval), Christine (Marco D'Ottavi), Mark, Tom (Jennifer Beman), Pam (Carl Quick) and Ellen White and 19 grandchildren: Michelle, Jonathan, Leslie, Jessica, Marco, Eileen, Alejandro, Beatriz, Miguel, Emilio and Mario Sandoval; Justina (Clark Scheible), Ben, Christopher and Jeremy Quick; Taylor and Morgana D'Ottavi; Stella and Miles White; and her great-grandson Forrest Scheible. Helen was loved dearly, and will also be greatly missed by her many nieces, nephews, cousins, in-laws and close friends, including her incredible life-long pals from grade school – Helen, Jean Marie and Bob.

A burial service is scheduled for Friday, March 22 at 11 a.m. at the Cheltenham Veterans Cemetery, 11301 Crain Highway, with the family hosting lunch at a nearby restaurant following the ceremony. A celebration of Helen's life is planned for the afternoon of Saturday, March 23 from 2 to 5 p.m. at 2-L Gardenway. Donations in Helen's memory (in lieu of flowers) can be made to So Others Might Eat (SOME), 71 O Street N.W., Washington, DC 20001.

owners. I was however sad to see that previous residents who were left no choice but to leave the apartment building because their leases ended, or their apartments were in poor condition seem to have been left behind with no one to help us get redress from Charlestowne North Holding LLC.

Speaking personally, I moved into the apartment at the end of November 2022, and throughout the year I lived in Charlestowne North, I experienced a massive cockroach infestation which took months of pleading to resolve, mold issues in the apartment which were never properly addressed and resulted in my disposal of personal property to avoid mold introduction to my new apartment, high utility bills from Studebaker Submetering Inc which I paid in addition to those stipulated in my lease contract, false accusations of debt owed to the owners even though I presented evidence from my bank that I had made the payments in question, and package theft from living in an apartment right next to the then perpetually unsecured door. To date, I continue to receive notifications from Charlestowne North claiming that I owe them money – today's total was about $900 – and letters from Studebaker Submetering claiming that I owe them outstanding utility bills to the tune of $500.

I have also yet to receive my security deposit of $1,000 from Charlestowne North Holding LLC, even though I moved out of my apartment unit over 45 days ago (November 20, 2023, to be exact) and left the apartment in pristine condition or at the very least, infinitely better than that I found it when I moved in. I was hoping that that could offset my initial move-in costs, but all attempts at retrieving my money have been in vain and many of the ongoing efforts are geared toward the current residents – we previous residents have had to pick up the pieces and try to live with the wounds and constant harassment inflicted on us by Charlestowne North Holding LLC. I and, I am sure, many of my fellow previous residents have filed reports with the Maryland Attorney General's office, but with the current backlog of complaints and limited staff, I worry it will take a long time before we see any resolution to our strangely one-sided relationship with Charlestowne North Holding LLC.

I am truly very grateful for your coverage of the ongoing developments at Charlestowne North Apartments, and hope this can shed some light on the plight of some of the less seen victims of Charlestowne North Holding LLC.

Shocked!

I was shocked to read the story about the planned cancellation of the WMATA G12 bus route that goes throughout Greenbelt, connecting two railway stations – Greenbelt and New Carrollton. G14 comes to Roosevelt Center but does not serve the main part of the residential area that G12 does and it has a long winding route serving other nearby communities. With G12 gone, Greenbelt will have only Prince George's County's The Bus Route 11 that serves the inner city; though it does not reach out to New Carrollton or maintain the extended schedule of G12 covering early morning and late evening.

I can understand the financial strain on WMATA, but cancelling an important route is not the solution that serves the public. It will only encourage more use of cars, defeating the purpose of public transportation. Personally,

I will have to use my car and spend $5 for parking at the station, an undue financial hardship on my budget. And there will be many more like me that ride the early morning G12 bus or a late evening return.

Maybe our city should offer some financial contribution to The Bus service to cover the area and time lost by the G12 cancellation. This will serve our community much better. City Council: think about it and act on it.

Rahul Mehta

Editor's Note: The Bus Route 16 also serves parts of Greenbelt, including on Saturdays, but does not go into Greenbelt Center.

Council Meets Faith Groups: Discuss Youth, Other Issues

by Erik Hanson

Sitting in a circle and passing a microphone to speak, the Greenbelt City Council and representatives of area faith groups had a dialogue at the February 28 worksession.

Representatives of faith groups included Susan Walker and Mary Ann Tretler from St. Hugh of Grenoble, Gloria Cline-Smyth from Good Samaritan Lutheran, Jim Fischer and Farinaz Firouzi from the Greenbelt Baha’i Community, Joe Park from Soka Gakkai, Stephen Unthank from Greenbelt Baptist, Saul Oresky from the Mishkan Torah Synagogue and Kevin Wright from Zion Church. Several representatives spoke of their connection to the Greenbelt Interfaith Leadership Association (GILA).

The main issues that came up during the discussion were youth, communication between the city and faith groups, and returning to in-person meetings following Covid.

Youthful indiscretions were mentioned by a couple of faith group representatives. They were looking for ways to engage young people in more valuable pursuits. Greenbelt recreation opportunities and Learn to Earn workforce development were mentioned as options for youth. Other faith community leaders offered suggestions on how to engage youth, including giving them their own space and offering them food.

Desire for better communication between the city and faith groups was expressed by both sides. Faith groups wished to learn about city activities so they could find engaging activities for their young members, connect members to city social services, be aware of issues in the community they serve and reach out to residents to let them know about faith group activities. Greenbelt representatives, while noting the separation of church and state, hoped for cooperation in providing services to residents.

Faith groups noted that while most everything is back to in-person following Covid, some members still attend online. While Zoom can create some connection with those unable to attend in person, some faith leaders mentioned the importance of face-to-face relationships.

Cinema Audience Enjoys Live Music with Silent Film

by Amina Khalifa

On Saturday, February 24, Greenbelt Cinema showed one of my favorite silent movies, Safety Last, with a live music performance by Andrew E. Simpson. Caitlin McGrath, executive director of the theater, gave a brief introduction for Simpson, who in turn made an equally brief introduction to the movie and talked about why he loves composing and playing for silent movies. He has performed for the three greats, Charlie Chaplin, Buster Keaton (his favorite as well as mine) and Harold Lloyd. As a spectator, I have to admit that his live performance made a world of difference, it added to the excitement, thrill, romance and hilarity. This was obvious by the bursts of laughter throughout the movie and by the unanimous applause at the end of it.

McGrath said there will be more films with live music to come and I, for one, will keep an eye out for them.

site. The city has issued multiple citations for unresolved code violations in some properties. Public comment included inquiries about fines and ARPA funding.

Police Department

In this past quarter, the Greenbelt Police Department has hired five officer candidates going through the police academy, with three hired on the day of the meeting to go to the next police academy. The department has also held multiple community functions.

Recreation

In the last quarter, the Recreation Department added two pickleball courts, bringing the city to 12 courts. The department tested language translation tools in a pilot program at the Aquatic & Fitness Center. Park rangers will also have a tablet with translation capability in the spring, and continued financial assistance for summer camp scholarships will be included in the FY 2025 budget.

Museum

Work on phase one of the Greenbelt Museum's Education and Visitor Center planned for 10-A Crescent Road will likely start in the next six months. Currently, the museum is about $200,000 to $220,000 short of the funding needed to complete phase two of the expansion project.

Grants

The city's Grants Department has filed documentation for grants totaling $1,634,650 in the second quarter. The team is busy applying for grants to offset program costs and improve services.

the commission was really to face the fact that, on what we call the Nation's Report Card, Maryland's score was about in the middle ... and moving in the wrong direction," said Rachel Hise, executive director of the Blueprint's Accountability and Implementation Board, a state entity that's making sure school districts adhere to the plan.

But Hogan had an "aha" moment of his own after Democrats crafted the Kirwan Commission's report into comprehensive legislation. In 2019, Hogan criticized the pending reform proposal, telling a group of county officials it would mean "billions and billions more in mandated spending increases for county and state taxpayers," according to The Frederick News-Post.

Hogan vetoed the bill creating the Blueprint in May 2020, saying he did not want to raise taxes amid the pandemic to fund the education plan. The General Assembly overrode his veto in 2021.

And the following year, voters elected a strong backer of the Blueprint, Democrat Wes Moore, to succeed Hogan.

On the first day of the current legislative session that began in January, Moore said he believes in the reform plan and will work with the General Assembly to ensure the Blueprint is implemented properly and sustainably.

"I believe in the premise and the promise of the Blueprint. I think we need a world-class education system in the state of Maryland," Moore said. "I think that's going to be a prerequisite for us to be able to accomplish the economic goal that we're hoping for."

Lofty Goals

In the state's 24 public school districts, the Blueprint and its lofty goals are already beginning to take shape.

Each school district has drawn up a preliminary plan for how it will meet targets for offering pre-K, increasing teacher salaries and improving student performance. The Accountability and Implementation Board has approved all those plans after first asking for revisions.

The Blueprint is meant to revamp the state's education system by presenting the same opportunities for all students. With a law like the Blueprint, one size has to fit all to achieve its goals of maximizing reading and math skills, as well as increasing pathways into college, said Sen. Jim Rosapepe (D - Prince George's and Anne Arundel).

"So we want that for every kid across the state. We don't want variation of those goals," Rosapepe said. "Now, the details of how stuff is paid for - I mean, I think that's a conversation that will be ongoing."

ERHS Alien Raiders Pull Hat Trick At State Robotics Championship

by Karl B. Hille

Eleanor Roosevelt High School Robotics Club will send three robots to the VEX Robotics Competition's High School World Championship in Dallas, Texas, in April, following a strong showing at the Maryland State Championship on Saturday, March 2.

While all six of the squads building robots for Roosevelt made it to the elimination rounds of the State Championship, an achievement in itself, the three going to the World Championships qualified through different means. Two squads of students, led by freshman Von Skaggs and junior Brendan Hille of Greenbelt, joined forces with their robots to advance to the final round of the State Championship, where they placed second. A third squad led by junior Felix Hass, also of Greenbelt, earned the tournament's Design Award in recognition of their excellence on the field, creativity in problem solving and documentation of their engineering design process. All three achievements qualified the teams for the Vex Robotics World Championship where they will face the top two percent of competitors worldwide.

"In the beginning of the season I said that if we made it to Worlds, it would be on the strength of our notebook," Hass said. "Collectively, my team has put thousands of hours into the notebook, and it's amazing to see that work pay off."

Roosevelt's team, the Area 53 Alien Raiders led by Coach Karl Hille of Greenbelt, consists of six squads of three to six students. Each squad plans, builds, programs and competes with a unique robot designed to address a variety of physical challenges, which change every year. Four robots compete at a time on one field, in two alliances of two robots each. Matches include a 15-second autonomous period where robots are guided only by their computer programming, then a 1:45-minute driver-controlled period.

In this year's challenge, called Over Under, robots earned points for moving triangular-shaped plastic balls called Triballs or "acorns" over a low barrier into their alliance's offensive scoring zone, or scoring more points for pushing them under their net-covered goal. In the last seconds of each two-minute game, robots may attempt to climb a vertical structure and score points based on how high they elevate off the field.

The 12th-ranked alliance led by Skaggs exceeded all expectations to face the number two alliance from Dulaney High School in Towson. He invited Hille's 42nd-ranked team to form an alliance for the final elimination rounds because, he said, "What truly matters is the spirit, dedication and potential within a team. I chose Brendan's team not for their position on a list, but for the passion and unity that define us as a club."

Hass's 255-page engineering notebook, in addition to recording each decision, test, design and result through the season, was a programming innovation in itself. Hass and his fellow programmers - Ajibola Ajani of Bowie, Isaiah Blanc of Laurel and David Blaufuss of Greenbelt - developed a computer program to turn their contributions, text, images and data into a formatted, personalized and professional notebook.

"It takes in user-written content as input," Hass said, "and outputs a formatted document in an incredibly consistent, customizable visual style."

They also made their Notebookinator code available on the software-sharing website Github for other robotics teams to use and develop.

Their success has put the parents' booster organization into overdrive figuring out how to cover the costs of registration and travel for Worlds, as well as the costs to repair and improve their robots over the next seven weeks and to ship their robots to the tournament.

"I couldn't be more proud of the hard work these students have put in to achieve this," Coach Hille said. "Now it's up to the parents and supporters of this team at Roosevelt, throughout Greenbelt and beyond to help them get to Dallas."
