USDA Cuts Will Impact Fresh Food Availability at Greenbelt Distributions

by Bonnie Schrack

Last week, the News Review reported on sources of supplemental food available in Greenbelt for those whose budgets don't reach far enough. Since then, a worrisome development threatens to curtail the city's large monthly food distribution program that serves hundreds of individuals and draws residents to the Community Center and Franklin Park, and is delivered to Green Ridge House every third Thursday. At the Community Center, a line of cars usually wraps around the parking lot, frequently stretching to Crescent and Southway. The Capital Area Food Bank (CAFB), which provides the fresh produce for the distributions, has informed Greenbelt that the city will be removed from the list of communities receiving monthly guaranteed produce deliveries

ERHS Alum Tramell Tillman Shines in Apple TV+'s Severance

by Diya Shah

In Apple TV+'s critically acclaimed show Severance, Tramell Tillman plays Mr. Milchick, the (mostly) ever-smiling enforcer of workplace boundaries at Lumon Industries, where employees' memories are surgically severed between their work and personal lives. But there's no severing Greenbelt from Tillman's story. He's a graduate of Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) class of 2003, but not many know that this breakout star has his roots in Greenbelt.

With his commanding presence and unnerving charm on screen, the actor quickly became a fan favorite with critics and audiences alike, taking viewers by storm with his show-stopping performance in the finale of Severance's second sea-

"My journey to acting started in Maryland," Tillman said in an interview with the newspaper amNewYork in 2022, describing how as a shy kid, his mother pushed him to perform in a Christmas play. That's when the acting bug bit - and never left - but Tillman's journey to viewer screens wasn't a straightforward one. After graduating from ERHS, he initially pursued higher education at Xavier University of Louisiana, intending to become an

Social Justice Student Awards Draw Crowd, Public Figures

Room 201 at the Community Center was buzzing with excitement as student winners with their families entered the room to participate in the Fourth Annual Social Justice Student Awards Ceremony sponsored by the Prince George's County Lynching Memorial Project (PGCLMP) and hosted by the Greenbelt Black History and Culture Committee. The excitement increased as more and more students, parents and community folks arrived and more chairs were set up.

Mayor Emmett Jordan was on hand for the fourth straight year. Joining him for the first time were State Senator Alonzo Washington, State Delegate Ashanti Martinez and County Council Member Jolene Ivey. All three representatives presented the contest winners with congratulatory citations for their achievements.

The ceremony was opened by Terry Hamlin and Sherri Mehta from PGCLMP, who served as program hosts, followed by greetings from Lois Rosado, chair of the Greenbelt Black History and Culture Committee. Rosado introduced Jordan, who thanked the PGCLMP and congratulated the students and their families. Lula Beatty provided attendees with background and history of the project's Social Justice Student Awards Contest and acknowledged the four racial terror lynching victims from Prince George's County: Thomas Juricks, 1869; John Henry Scott, 1875; Michael

by Matthew Arbach

On April 14 the Greenbelt City Council voted 6 to 1 in favor of transitioning the city employee retirement plan from the longtime use of MissionSquare to Nationwide, with Councilmember Rodney Roberts giving the dissenting vote. The city's longstanding broker NFP, a global benefits broker, represented by Andrew Prevost and Ray Reeves, met with council at this meeting to give the results of their effort to find the best deal possible for employees, with Nationwide emerging as the front-runner in many areas. This decision impacts current employees primarily, as retirees are free to use any provider of their choice at any time, including MissionSquare.

In addition to MissionSquare and Nationwide, NFP initiated a bidding exchange with the following providers: Voya, Corebridge, Empower and Lincoln. After several exchanges, Nationwide offered a .02 percent fee for both the 457(b) and 401 plans, this being the lowest bid of them all, surpassing MissionSquare's final bid of .07 percent. This fee

Defend Institutions

Last Monday's April Reel and Meal at the New Deal Café focused on films and discussion of three vital government agencies that have been shuttered or crippled in the recent waves of firings. A Greenbelter and justfired 15-year employee of the U.S. Agency for International Development spoke about all the good work that organization did, such as immunizing one billion people against malaria, worldwide disaster relief and so much more.

Many of our hardworking, dedicated Greenbelt neighbors and friends work or worked for important U.S. government agencies and institutions. Many have been fired recently or live in fear that they will be next. These agencies and institutions they have been part of are vital to our country and the world in which we want to live.

Dr. Timothy Snyder, in his best-selling book On Tyranny, gives 20 lessons on how to protect ourselves, our community and the country we want to have. Defend Institutions is his second lesson and we are well advised to do so, along with the other 19, at this perilous time.

Frank Gervasi

Correction

In the April 24 issue the article about tree planting in GHI common areas underestimated the number of trees planted by the city's Public Works Department. In the last 25 years that number is estimated to be 5,750.

Sinners

Trying to leave their troubled lives behind, twin brothers (Michael B. Jordan) return to their hometown to start again, only to discover that an even greater evil is waiting to welcome them back. Said critic Adam Kempenaar of Filmspotting, "Sinners is a redemption movie, a revenge movie with elements of Blaxploitation, and certainly a red-blood-soaked horror movie; it's also deeply romantic and has the rhythms and audaciousness of some of our boldest musicals.'

It's Not always about the Food

by Christopher Irwin

At St. Hugh's Catholic Church, this year's April 1 was less about pranking and more about thanking as church members came together to recognize and celebrate the parish's namesake, St. Hugh of Grenoble. Dozens of participants feasted on the wide range of delicacies that were provided by the diverse congregation of the parish. In fact, the food was such a hit that, at event's end, there was very little evidence left to indicate that any food had even been there at

Yet, like so many of the gatherings at St. Hugh's, the refreshments took a backseat to the sense of community and fellowship that was manifested. Friends, families and children, young and old, seemed to crowd every available nook and cranny of Grenoble Hall as everyone celebrated the character of the man for whom the church was named. St. Hugh of Grenoble was well known for his inspired preaching and his generosity to the poor. This same spirit of generosity was on full display as the event welcomed people from many different backgrounds and walks of life who gathered together to share their food, their cultures and their affection for one another.

Herb Hille, who is not a resident of Greenbelt, was informed of the event by his nephew. "My ... opinion of the parish has been one of being charmed by the open greeting friendliness, welcoming nature of all involved ... the cheerfulness was a great topping." Also attending the celebration were Jessica and Isidoro Garcia who, like Hille, are not current Greenbelt residents. Expressing their appreciation for the occasion, Jessica stated, "Parishioners, and I mean everyone, put effort into preparing and serving [this] big spread and variety of international food and the room is set up as always. A great way of socializing and reconnecting with our pastor and with coparishioners."

When asked how the diversity of this event relates to recent efforts to downplay inclusion in current society, Hille responded, "Events like this, however seemingly small, are a salvation from the current trend of spreading callous, mean-spirited, uncaring, cruel indifference."

It is known that St. Hugh of Grenoble was loved by the poor and disliked by the nobility of his day. He spent his life attending to the needs of others. This celebration could be seen as an opportunity for all who attended to follow his example, exercising an attitude that is very much needed in our community today.

Green, 1878; and Stephen Williams, 1894. The Social Justice contest is a concrete way to honor their memories.

Essay Contest Winners

Caroline Gyan of Frederick Douglass High School won third place with her essay, Veil of Injustice: The Erasure. She read from her essay about the terrible experiments that were practiced by Dr. J. Marion Sims on enslaved Black women without any form of anesthesia and who perpetuated the idea that women of African descent do not feel pain the way European-descended women do. Sims' work was later considered a form of racial torture. Gyan also described the Tuskegee experiment on Black American men who were infected with syphilis and watched to determine how the disease progressed in humans. They were never given penicillin, an effective cure at the time. This experiment led to a major distrust of the medical establishment in the African American community that persists to this day. She also wrote about current maternal health disparities leading to high death rates among Black American women.

Devin Bond, who tied for third place, and second place winner Zyon Lawson were not able to attend.

Girelys Tavarez Ramirez, of Chesapeake Math and IT (CMIT) Academy North High School won first place with From Chains to Denial: The Hidden Cost of Colonialism in the Dominican Republic. She read her essay about how colonialism produced racial, social and economic barriers for African-descended peoples in the Dominican Republic, as well as in the United States, all stemming from systems of colonialism and slavery. She described how the descendants of black-skinned Dominicans and Haitians are disenfranchised and even deported to Haiti. European-descended people and those more fair-skinned are treated with deference in both countries and it all stems from the vestiges of colonial racist practices and policies.

Creative Writing/ Spoken Word Winners

Ava Raines of Eleanor Roosevelt High School won third place with Parties Unknown and recited her powerful poem about how racial terror lynchings are described by the fact that parties/perpetrators who lynch the victims were always "unknown."

Kaliyah Fletcher of Frederick Douglass High School won second place with The Strength in Our Strike and recited her poem about honoring African ancestors, maintaining dignity in the face of injustice and always striding with pride and aspiring toward excellence. It was very moving.

Cheyenne M. Godfrey of Eleanor Roosevelt High School won first place with Fields of Greed. Godfrey recited a passionate poem that produced great emotion in the audience about hope in the midst of constant despair and anti-Blackness practices that tear at the soul, yet will not break it.

Visual Arts Winners

Riley-Alicia Burton of Charles Herbert Flowers High School took third place with Never For-

Angelina Akumkperik of Charles Herbert Flowers High School took second place with Latasha Harlins.

Angel Adesoji of CMIT Academy North High School took first place with Intercepting Fingers.

Unfortunately, the paintings were not present. However, each painter described their work and while their descriptions made it possible to imagine the works, being able to see the paintings would have helped. The paintings will be shown on the PGCLMP website, pgclmp.org.

Inspiration

Tavarez Ramirez stated that she was inspired to learn more about the history of the Dominican Republic after visiting with her family and noticing how people with darker skin tones were treated disrespectfully in the country. She wanted to learn more and did the research, producing an award-winning essay.

Fletcher said what influenced her poem was the racial injustice that she witnesses and the fact that Black Americans seem to be arrested more than any other group of Americans, and many are innocent of any crime.

Gyan was inspired by the book Medical Apartheid and the stories of her mother and family who work in the medical field.

This was a well-attended program, with over 60 people present. The audience left inspired by the excellent work of these students and their parents.

beginning July 1. At last week's budget worksession, Mayor Emmett Jordan called the news "extremely alarming." However, despite the cuts in CAFB support, monthly food distributions by the city will continue.

As reported in the News Review this past November (see November 28, 2024, issue), each month a large refrigerator truck brings produce and frozen food from CAFB to the Greenbelt Assistance in Living (GAIL) office in the Community Center, which is part of the Greenbelt CARES social services program. The food transported to Springhill Lake and Green Ridge House is limited by the amount that can fit into the city van. This delivery also supports those who are unable to leave their homes. It's a program that's been ongoing for over 20 years and, in November, Katherine Farzin, GAIL outreach coordinator, told the News Review their program was constantly growing.

CAFB depends on U.S. Department of Agriculture programs supplying healthy food to communities across the country. This spring, those programs have been cut by $1 billion by the Trump administration, and these huge reductions in funding are causing serious strains on the nation's food banks at a time when the need for food assistance has soared and is expected to rise over the coming year.

The city recently received a letter from CAFB informing it of the difficult decision to remove Greenbelt from their list of monthly guaranteed produce deliveries. Those deliveries typically included two pallets with a total of 3,500 to 4,000 pounds of produce, according to Christal Batey, assistant director of CARES and GAIL. Now that the amount of produce available to CAFB is so much less, they have had to prioritize its distribution to communities that cannot afford to provide other sources of food for their residents, explained Batey.

After June, the city will continue to purchase nonperishable foods for distribution, and a limited amount of fresh produce, subject to availability, will also come from CAFB. The city will not have to pay for that fresh produce but it will have to navigate a challenging new system requiring what produce is available to CAFB to be ordered by the pallet during a specific time window, selecting from among the limited number of pallets. There is a new limit of 2,000 pounds of produce, approximately half of what Greenbelt has been accustomed to, which realistically won't allow more than one pallet to be ordered. Staff will strive to provide as much as possible, but there is no guarantee of what will be available in a given month, said Batey.

Many Greenbelt households depend on these food resources. In April, 212 households were served, including 517 individuals. One hundred and one households were served out of the GAIL offices in the center of Greenbelt as part of the central drive-up distribution, 50 households received food in Franklin Park, 44 at Green Ridge House and 17 people received food delivered to their homes. Batey will be keeping track of how changes to the economy are reflected in the demand for food assistance.

is collected quarterly, according to Human Resources Department head Dawane Martinez.

In a subsequent interview with the News Review, Martinez explained other advantages of using Nationwide as, he said, it offers "a more robust investment lineup and a 60 percent investment cost savings to city employees. Additionally, Nationwide's loan fees and other transaction fees are less expensive than MissionSquare."

At the meeting, City Manager Josué Salmerón explained that Nationwide also offers attractive services, including technology assistance, a mobile app and data security.

Martinez and Salmerón said that the proposal of a shift to Nationwide received unanimous favorable support from current employees.

Retirees Di Quynn Reno and Celia Craze, both at the meeting and in separate interviews with the News Review, felt that the city was perhaps hasty in making this decision, as there didn't seem to have been enough time for employees to properly consider the ramifications of the change and for MissionSquare to make an additional appeal to the city. Both have had a positive experience with MissionSquare.

Prevost understood the need for an informed decision, but stated that any more time spent on this decision could mean significant cost for employees and retirees. As the change will not take effect until August 5, Prevost, Martinez and Salmerón all felt that there was ample time to properly train participants on the new provider.

After a discussion on possibly waiting until the next meeting to vote, council largely felt that enough time and effort had gone into this to make a proper decision, citing the lack of any negative feedback from employees.

In later interviews, Mayor Emmett Jordan felt that the decision "was in the best interest of the city's employees." Councilmember Amy Knesel noted the "substantial fee reduction and access to an expanded investment portfolio through Nationwide." Both emphasized the freedom for retirees to stay with MissionSquare, if they choose.

orthopedic surgeon, before transferring to Jackson State University and graduating with a communications degree. After working for a few years in education supporting children affected by Hurricane Katrina, Tillman decided to pursue a Master of Fine Arts degree from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

Since 2014, Tillman has lived in New York City, balancing side jobs while booking roles on the stage and screen. Until now, Tillman's name has been relatively unknown, but the cultural phenomenon that Severance has become is quickly changing things. Directed by Ben Stiller, the show is Apple TV+'s most popular ever, breaking streaming records and continuing to gain traction in the wake of the second season's completion.

Viewers who are familiar with the show know how Tillman's character of Mr. Milchick danced his way into our hearts in the first season. But in the second season's finale, Tillman once again steals the screen, this time leading a full marching band down Lumon's eerie, glowing hallways in one of the show's most striking and surreal moments.

His captivating and memorable performance in that drum major role might be thanks to the fact that Tillman has had some experience on that front. During his time at ERHS, Tillman played the saxophone in the Raider Marching Band, an experience that truly makes his grand finale sequence a full-circle moment.

"When I learned he went to my high school, it was mindblowing," said Pritha Zaheen, a 2021 graduate of ERHS and current student at the University of Maryland. "I bet he was encouraged by the theater team here," she said. "Our theater teachers and program were really supportive and nice, so I'm sure he had a good experience at Roosevelt."

While his rise may have flown under the radar for some in Greenbelt, Tillman's performance has sparked recognition and pride among those who now realize the connection. And as Severance continues to draw viewers in with its thought-provoking plot and stellar acting, Greenbelt can count one of television's most intriguing stars among its own.

UMD Senate Votes to Join Big Ten Defense against Federal Intrusion

by Diya Shah

On April 24, the University of Maryland (UMD) Senate voted overwhelmingly to support joining a coalition of Big Ten universities forming a "mutual defense compact" - an initiative aimed at protecting academic freedom and institutional integrity from what faculty members say are increasing threats by the Trump administration.

The vote, which passed 93 to 17 to 5, comes amid growing concern in higher education over federal attempts to influence universities through funding cuts, visa revocations and attacks on diversity, equity and inclusion policies. However, the resolution passed by the UMD Senate is advisory only; final authority lies with university President Darryll Pines, who has not yet signed on.

If UMD joins, it will become one of nearly a dozen Big Ten institutions pledging to pool legal and financial resources to defend any member targeted by federal overreach. The compact was first introduced by Rutgers University's faculty senate in March in response to what its resolution called "legal, financial and political incursions" by the federal government.

"We are standing up for academic freedom, institutional integrity and important research," said Kim Coles, a faculty senator and English professor at UMD, in a statement to the Baltimore Banner. "Our only option, I think, is to lock arms and stand together."

Pines has expressed tentative support. He signed a collaborative statement through the American Association of Colleges and Universities that called for "constructive engagement with the federal administration." The letter, signed by college and university presidents across the country, rejected "the coercive use of public research funding" and opposed "undue government intrusion" on college campuses. "I think it's important for higher education to speak with one voice," he told UMD's student publication, The Diamondback.

Although current UMD faculty from Greenbelt did not respond in time for a comment, Greenbelt resident and retired UMD professor Eric McKenzie, who taught at the university until 2018, said he was "glad to hear about the Senate's resolution vote," and that he hopes President Pines will sign off on the agreement.

As of now, UMD is not among the institutions that have received a letter from the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights threatening enforcement over campus antisemitism concerns. Still, faculty and students alike have emphasized the need for proactive solidarity.

Kyle Cassell, a senior government and politics major, expressed appreciation that his university is trying to be on the right side of history. "Columbia [University's] capitulation and Yale's intellectual exodus are hallmark signs of how quickly institutions can fall victim to authoritarian paranoia, but as precedent shows, there needs to be a current of resistance for actual change to come," he said. "I'm happy to be part of a school actively resisting a dictator-inprogress. There's strength in numbers."

UMD's decision on whether to officially join the compact is still

ERHS Girls & Boys Lacrosse Teams Win League, County Championships

by Patrick Gleason

The Eleanor Roosevelt Raiders celebrate another county lacrosse title. They now look to obtain the region championship.

The league and county championship trophies have returned to Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) this spring for both the girls and boys lacrosse teams. The girls avenged their only regular season loss with a 6-3 victory over the CMIT North Tigers on Monday, May 5 at Laurel High School. The Raiders dropped a closely contested match over spring break to the Tigers while several members of the Raider roster traveled out of town. The Tigers maintained their ferocity from the first matchup as Roosevelt clung to a 4-3 lead entering the fourth quarter. Then, junior Isabelle Becraft asserted herself as she has throughout the Raiders' successful season. Becraft scored twice, while also enduring a rough foul near the goal, to solidify the county title for Coach Charles Mills and seniors Cora Moore and Claire Peña, who guided the Raiders along with junior Violet Stallings, while sisters Alena and Elisabeth Beckmann used their speed to support Becraft in the Roosevelt attack. Senior Christabel Ahaghotu solidifies the Raider defense in goal. The Raiders now turn to a region semi-final at home on Friday, May 9 with the region's number one seed.

Boys Team

The boys followed the girls' triumph with energy - scoring early and often against the Gwynn Park Yellow Jackets. Senior Soren Bryan struck multiple times in the first period as the Raiders sprinted to a 7-1 lead, leaving no doubt, even as thunderstorms loomed. Senior Vishant Bhagat and junior Nicholas Brown added to the Raider attack that earned them a decisive victory before the storms curtailed the game. Coach Jeff Holmes will now prepare his squad for their regional semifinal, also this Friday, with hopes of a repeat as region champions.

Girl Scouts Celebrate World Thinking Day in Greenbelt

by Eliana Young Wilson

On the afternoon of April 6, Girl Scouts of every age got together in the Youth Center gym to celebrate World Thinking Day. On this day, scout troops, who choose different countries to research and represent for the occasion, unite to share facts about the country that they picked, learn facts about other countries and participate in fun activities and Girl Scout traditions.

The celebration started off with a flag ceremony and then recognition of Girl Scouts who were receiving awards. Then came the flag parade, where every troop got to show off their country's flag.

After that, the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts (WAGGGS) activities began. The many different activities troops could do included drawing with chalk about their experience in Girl Scouts to represent what's happening for Girl Scouts right Next on the agenda was trying all the food that each troop prepared from their country. Many Girl Scouts love this part because they get to branch out and try a lot of different unique and fun foods and drinks from around the world while learning things about each place at the same time. At the Greenbelt gathering countries included Brazil, Poland, Australia, Japan and many more.

After the food tasting, Girl Scouts exchanged "Special Whatchamacallits Affectionately Pinned Somewhere" or SWAPS that they made, a tradition in Girl Scouts. For World Thinking Day the SWAPS were small crafts representing their troop's country. It was a chance to socialize and show off the handmade items, and a fun bonus was to try and collect one SWAP from every country.

The celebration ended with a closing ceremony, where everyone gets in a circle and squeezes people's hands until the squeeze goes around the entire circle. It's a fun Girl Scout tradition and brings a sense of unity and friendliness.

Girl Scout World Thinking Day is a great day to celebrate different countries, cultures, foods, and more, but it's also a great day to make new friends, have fun and learn how to be independent. It also teaches Girl Scouts about the importance of their voices, and how they can work to do what's right in their community. So next time you see a large gathering of Girl Scouts, know that we're working to change the world for the better, one step at a time.

Dora McKenzie (12) and her parents recently installed this Little Free Library at the city playground with the basketball court by St. Hugh's Church. Dora chose it as her "passion project" for her class at Greenbelt Middle School. She did much of the work, including making plans, cutting the wood, using a power screwdriver, caulking and painting. She's very proud of her library, and it's seeing a lot of use.

Spray Paint Draws a Crowd For May's Artful Afternoon

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Sunday, May 4, Shaymar Higgs, executive director of The SPACE, hosted a spray-painting art workshop for this month's Artful Afternoon. Participants used water-based spray paint, stencils and found objects to create art on their canvases. They filled several tables on the Community Center lawn, enjoying a fortunate break in the rain. This was the third year that Higgs has offered the spray-painting activity as an Artful Afternoon, and it was popular with residents of all ages.

Those who missed the workshop sessions on Sunday have a chance to participate in a second Artful Afternoon workshop this Sunday, May 11 from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. at Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Sign up at sugeni. us/VGWP.

Golden Age Club Reaches 65, Celebrates Its Anniversary

by Mary Moien

The Greenbelt Golden Age Club has been in existence for more than 65 years; it is thought to be the oldest senior club in Prince George's County. On April 16, members celebrated their anniversary at the Holiday Inn in College Park. They enjoyed a great lunch, sang (a lot), danced (a little) and mingled from table to table. Thanks to Suzanne Sligh for taking the lead in planning this year's event.

The local quartet TGIF again put on a great show, playing and singing songs "from the 1950s and beyond." Some rowdy Golden Agers sitting closest to the entertainment sang loudly, linked arms and swayed to the music (who remembers Run Around Sue?). A few brave souls even took to the dance floor. Everyone arrived early and stayed late to laugh and chat with their Golden Age friends. It was a lovely day and a great banquet.

Two of the Golden Age Club's most active members, Jim and Suze Marley, wave to the camera.
