Council Worksession Ponders Ranked Choice Voting Option

by Abel Bisrat

The June 18 Greenbelt City Council worksession covered the issue of ranked choice voting (RCV). Greenbelt Election Advisory Board Member Nicole Shyong presented the principles underlying the proposal, what its potential application could look like and its possible benefits and pitfalls. Shyong also addressed any outstanding questions and the topic of a potential referendum on the question of whether to implement it.

What Is Ranked Choice?

RCV is a system where voters vote in order of their preferences for a given set of candidates. In Greenbelt's current system (called plurality voting), voters select up to seven choices out of a list of candidates without any distinction among them in terms of whom they would most prefer to see in office. With ranked choice, voters select whom they prefer the most as a first choice, which one they prefer slightly less as second, next most preferred as third, and so on.

The process of RCV is iterative and computer managed. Successive rounds are triggered until either all positions are filled, or no candidates can pass the threshold.

This would not be as dramatic of a change as plurality-to-ranked choice transitions typically are since Greenbelt voters already have the chance to select more than one choice. However, in our current plurality system, voters will sometimes not vote at all for their second-most-preferred candidate in order to increase the chances for their favorite winning. ## Fields, Basements Flooded With Intense Runoff to Lake

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Extreme weather has continued in Greenbelt over the last week. On Thursday, July 17, an excessive heat warning was issued for our area and the city advised residents of the availability of cooling centers at the Library, Community Center, Municipal Building, Youth Center and Police Station. Then, two days later the city was under a flash flood watch. On Saturday, July 19, more than two inches of rain fell rapidly in Greenbelt, and flooding occurred around the city, including Braden Field and the tennis courts.

Impact on Greenbelt Lake

The repository for much of the deluge was Greenbelt Lake, where water cascaded in from Braden Field and over the culverts and forebay area at the south end of the lake. There, close to Charlestowne North and Lakecrest Drive, water engulfed the area where sediment is supposed to be filtered out, and rushed over the path. Public Information Officer Chondria Andrews said that city staff noticed

Goddard Director Resigns Amid Space Center's Uncertain Future

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Monday, July 21, NASA Goddard Space Flight Center's (GSFC) Center Director Mackenzie Lystrup announced in a message to colleagues that she will be "stepping aside." The final day for Lystrup, who joined GSFC in April 2023, will be August 1.

The announcement comes as NASA faces the prospect of deep cuts should President Trump's funding plan succeed, but also as Congress seems prepared to push back to save NASA's funding. Under Trump's proposal, GSFC stands to lose 48 percent of its civil servants, if one draws a direct correlation between funding and workforce (for more see the July 17 issue). On Sunday, July 20, protestors gathered outside NASA HQ in Washington, D.C., on "Moon Day," a day commemorating the 1969 Apollo 11 mission and the first steps on the moon.

Lystrup didn't say what her next steps would be but announced Deputy Center Director Cynthia Simmons would take the position of Acting Center Director. "I leave with confidence in Cynthia, the center leadership team, and all of you who will help shape the next chapter of this center. I am honored to have been a part of this incredible journey with you. It has been my privilege," Lystrup wrote in the message to her colleagues, which the News Review obtained a copy of. In a separate message, Acting NASA Associate Administrator Vanessa Wyche expressed gratitude to Lystrup for leading over 8,000 civil servants and contractors at GSFC for over two years and wished her well in future endeavors.

The loss of the center's director at this critical time sounds like bad news for GSFC, where workers are bracing for bad news and a potential Reduction in Force. Though some remain hopeful Congress will protect NASA's budget and the Science Mission Directorate (SMD) that is Goddard's primary funding source, it's possible even then that Trump could withhold or refuse to spend money appropriated by Congress.

Superintendent's Total Severance Tops $733,992 but by How Much?

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

After 30 days exactly, the maximum time allowable by law, the Office of the General Counsel of Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) responded to the Greenbelt News Review's Maryland Public Information Act (MPIA) request for details of the separation and compensation paid or owed to Former Superintendent Millard House II.

PGCPS' counsel responded by sending a separation document that included no dollar amounts or financial figures at all. Other news outlets, who would also have received responses to similarly timed MPIAs likely received the same information, leaving the Washington Post to report that House will receive "at least $730,000," for example; and other newsrooms to use similarly approximate terms.

What we know from the separation agreement that was signed June 12 is that PGCPS and House have "mutually agreed" to terminate his contract early, when it should have run to June 30, 2027, and he'll receive a variety of compensations, most notably two years of salary. In the separation agreement, PGCPS Board Chair Brannndon Jackson and House "acknowledge no fault or breach of any

The Impoundment Control Act of 1974 seeks to limit that possibility and assure Congress retains the “power of the purse.”

NASA is losing thousands of employees, some through the Deferred Resignation Program, Voluntary Early Retirement and Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, announced in June, when the SMD was asked to plan for a 50 percent reduction (see the June 12 issue). However, others are fighting back. One Greenbelter who has been among those attending recent protests for the agency said a strong message at those events has been not to comply in advance. On July 16, Zoe Lofgren, Ranking Member of the House of Representatives Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, and Valerie P. Foushee, Ranking Member of its Subcommittee on Space and Aeronautics, sent a joint letter to NASA’s Interim Administrator Sean Duffy writing with “rising alarm for the future of NASA” and expressing just such an objection to advance compliance. “The notion that any executive branch agency would unilaterally take steps to implement a budget proposal before its budget is enacted by Congress is therefore offensive to our constitutional system. It would be illegal,” wrote Lofgren and Foushee.

“We believe the funding freezes currently being implemented at NASA, and across numerous other federal science agencies within the Committee’s jurisdiction, represent an overt act to carry out the White House’s directive to ‘align’ present-day agency spending with next year’s proposed budget. It should be obvious that such actions lack any authorization from Congress whatsoever and are flatly illegal. In taking these steps, the Trump Administration is violating the law, the Constitution, and the fundamental checks and balances between the branches of government that have governed our nation for more than two centuries,” reads the letter to Duffy. “NASA is currently operating under a continuing resolution for Fiscal Year 2025 that maintains largely the same funding levels for the agency as the previous year’s budget for Fiscal Year 2024,” state the pair, saying “roughly 2,700 employees and counting have accepted ‘deferred resignation’ offers amidst a campaign of pressure and intimidation overseen by senior agency officials,” and “This is impoundment in action, and it must stop immediately.”

The Last Class

American political economist, professor, author and social media sensation Robert Reich worked under presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. He served as Secretary of Labor in President Bill Clinton’s cabinet and as a member of President Barack Obama’s economic transition advisory board. This documentary feature is a nuanced and deeply personal portrait of Reich as he reflects on a period of immense transformation, personally and globally. The former Secretary of Labor might be famous for his public service, best-selling books and viral social media posts, but he always considered teaching his true calling. Now, after over 40 years and an extraordinary 40,000 students, Reich is preparing for his last class. Over the course of the film, Reich confronts the impending finality, and his own aging, with increasing candor, introspection and, ultimately, emotion. Drawing on his lifetime in politics, he uses his class, Wealth and Poverty, to offer us all a deeper look at why inequalities of income and wealth have widened significantly since the late 1970s, and why this poses dangerous risks to our society.

Superman

When Superman (David Corenswet) gets drawn into conflicts at home and abroad, his actions are questioned, giving tech billionaire Lex Luthor the opportunity to get the Man of Steel out of the way for good. Will intrepid reporter Lois Lane (Rachel Brosnahan) and Superman’s four-legged companion, Krypto, be able to help him before it’s too late? Said critic Coleman Spilde of Salon.com, “It is genuinely heartening to see a movie this massive refuse to shy away from how divided and broken our world is.”

Becoming Led Zeppelin

Interviews, performances and never-before-seen footage provide insight into the origins of Led Zeppelin and their meteoric rise to musical stardom. The critics’ consensus, is according to Rotten Tomatoes, “Presenting the origins of Led Zeppelin with laser focus, this doc isn’t the definitive document on the band but blows the roof off with its killer soundtrack.”

Tomorrowland

Whenever Casey Newton (Britt Robertson) touches a lapel pin with the letter T on it, she finds herself transported to Tomorrowland, a city filled with huge robots and sleek buildings. The gifted young woman recruits the help of scientist Frank Walker (George Clooney), a previous visitor to Tomorrowland, who years ago made a startling discovery about the future. Together, the two adventurers travel to the metropolis to uncover its mysterious secrets.

Greenbelt CORES Invites Solutions

Greenbelt residents frustrated by the Trump administration’s effects on federal services, scientific research, federal employees, humanitarian aid and international affairs began working with each other and the city to invite Greenbelt residents’ input to generate and begin implementing 100 solutions to set a brighter course for Greenbelt.

The CORES webpages say that “Greenbelt CORES (Collaborative Opportunities for Resilient & Enduring Solutions) is being organized by residents with city support with a goal to develop at least 100 solutions over the next 90 days to keep Greenbelt wonderful, welcoming and built to last. We must act to make Greenbelt a place that thrives no matter what.”

The following forms invite residents’ initial ideas, including identifying issues needing solutions and offering their skills.

Mary Emma Hooper

Mary Emma Hooper

Mary Emma Hooper, a longtime resident of Greenbelt, died peacefully on July 10, 2025, at the age of 98, just weeks shy of her 99th birthday.

Mary was born on August 15, 1926, to Elsie Viola Lyles Kelley Tucker and Marion Elmer Tucker. She worked for 30 years in the Press Release Office at the White House, serving under seven presidents. She took great pride in her work and enjoyed sharing stories of her time there.

Her love for dancing began in her younger years and continued for as long as she could find a willing dance partner. She traveled extensively, enjoyed theater outings and cherished trips to the beach with her girlfriends. A familiar face at community events, Mary managed to keep moving, often at a pace that surprised those around her.

Mary was a proud and engaged member of the Greenbelt community. She was active in several local organizations, including the Golden Age Club, the Greenbelt American Legion Post 136, Greenbelt Intergenerational Volunteer Exchange Service (GIVES), Beltsville Young at Heart Club and Laurel Senior Friendship Club. She also regularly volunteered with the City of Greenbelt's monthly food distribution efforts.

Mary will be remembered for her independence, quick mind, strong will and appreciation for a good meal.

Mary was predeceased by her brother, John Amos Kelley. She is survived by her nieces Patricia Keefe (Steve) and Paula Puglisi (Charles); great-nieces Kelley Osbourn (Ozzie) and Dawn Richardson (Eddie), and their families; great-nephew Charles Puglisi, II, and his family; and a host of great-great-nieces and nephews.

A Funeral Mass was held at St. Hugh of Grenoble Catholic Church, 135 Crescent Road, on Tuesday, July 22 at 10 a.m. A private interment will be held at a later date.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in Mary's memory to GIVES at givesgreenbelt.org/donate-today.

Marguerite Kincius

Marguerite Kincius died on July 15, 2025, at Grace House Assisted Living in Silver Spring. She was a resident of Greenbelt for over 70 years. She recently celebrated turning 100 years old this past February.

She was born Marguerite Ellen O'Connor in 1925, in Mount Rainier, the youngest of five children. She attended St. James Catholic Elementary School in Mount Rainier and Immaculate Conception Academy High School for girls in Washington, D.C.

She began her career working for the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), and worked later for the federal government in Washington, D.C.

In 1950, Marguerite met and married Kazimer Kincius and soon after moved into Greenbelt and began to raise a family of one girl and three boys.

She was a parishioner of St. Hugh of Grenoble Church and a member of the Ladies Sodality.

In the early 1960s she returned to the workforce at the Condolences to the family, friends and fellow parishioners of Marguerite Kincius, a mainstay of the Greenbelt community for more than 70 years.

Our sympathy also to the large family and many friends of Mary Hooper, who was a proud and engaged member of many Greenbelt organizations, particularly GIVES, the Golden Age Club and St. Hugh's Church.

Our condolences to the friends and family of Pat Carroll, a kind and vibrant member of the Greenbelt community for nearly 20 years.

Larry Flynn and Yvette Duboscq are happy to announce the marriage of their daughter, Elise, who grew up here, to Daniel Roybal. The couple were married in Santa Fe, N.M., with the bride's mother's older sister, MC, and the groom's father's older brother, Benny, acting as officiants. The couple met while working on their Ph.Ds. at Columbia University in New York City, and plan to continue to live there after a honeymoon trip to Mexico.

Council Deliberates Economic Development, Election, More

by Matthew Arbach

At the July 14 Greenbelt City Council meeting, topics ranged from elections to county property to the Save as You Throw proposal for city waste. An election discussion considered whether noncitizens, who will be able to vote in city elections this year, should also be allowed to run for office and whether 16-year-olds should work polls. There were updates on projects and purchases, discussion of the need for lobbying services and other matters.

Proclamations, Requests

July was proclaimed Parks and Recreation Month.

New Deal Café (NDC) Board President John Campanile said the café is seeking to transition from a Class C liquor license that allows beer and wine to a Class B which would add hard liquor. The Prince George’s County Liquor Board approved the request on July 22. Council adopted their frequent neutral stance on these types of matters, with Councilmember Rodney Roberts stating his general objection to the availability of alcohol in our society, believing it would not noticeably enhance the NDC’s business. Resident Michael Hartman, former president of the NDC board, reminded council it supported the NDC’s acquisition of the Class B license in 2002. (The council debate on the issue was reported in the September 19, 2002, issue.)

Council voted into the meeting’s minutes that they had had two recent closed sessions. The first was on June 18 and dealt with personnel matters and public safety, with no actions taken. The second was on June 30 and covered real estate acquisition, with City Manager Josué Salmerón tasked to seek related legal counsel services.

City Manager’s Report

Salmerón reported that the Economic Development team convened a successful nonprofit breakfast roundtable on July 10. The next American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) financial report will be submitted on July 30. The construction of two new pavilions at Buddy Attick Park has begun. The city has reached an agreement with Pepco to install eight level 2 and two DC fast EV charging stations at the Community Center at a cost of $150,000. A rodent problem at Hunting Ridge has been resolved with the help of the city’s Code Enforcement Department. The new bike racks for Roosevelt Center have been ordered. Two new Greenbelt police officers have been sworn in, with another expected shortly. A revised grant agreement was submitted to the Safe Streets For All program, and Salmerón noted more frequent traffic injuries are often tied to socioeconomic reasons.

First Readings

There was a first reading of a resolution that dealt with negotiated purchases of certain goods and services, by certain vendors when total fiscal year purchases from the vendor exceeds $10,000. It stressed that bid proposals are not warranted as some vendors are the sole source or best source of purchase.

Another first reading concerned the Save as You Throw solid waste removal pilot program, outlining an opt-in and opt-out choice. Sustainability Coordinator Luisa Robles presented a third option from program creator Waste Zero. It consisted of a yearly base fee of $240 for all, with residents then given the chance to participate and purchase bags as needed or opt out and pay $140 for a sticker. This was considered an easier approach for staff. Council deferred this item to give council and the public time to consider this new option. Staff is awaiting a response from Greenbelt Homes, Inc., about their decision on their level of involvement in this proposed program.

Medical Center

Community Planner Ryan Sigworth assisted council in reviewing the mandatory referral from the county pertaining to the county-owned property at 9001 Edmonston Road. This project transitions the site from general office usage to a medical one with the relocation of 11 County Health Department Divisions, a move the city supports. Sigworth said that the county agreed to do a traffic study, as this change would increase the number of trips to the area. Council voted to send a letter to the county outlining its preferences for an outdoor/picnic lunch area, improved vehicular wayfinding signage, removal of a dangerous crosswalk from the entry location and improved lighting.

Elections

The Board of Elections sought guidance on whether or not to allow noncitizen residents to run for council. (Noncitizens can vote in city elections beginning this year.) Council decided to postpone this decision, citing the already progressing candidate assessment process. Council expressed no strong objection to the idea, with several stating that they thought it unlikely such an issue would ever arise.

Council voted to allow 16-year-olds to work in city polling stations. Councilmember Kristen Weaver felt it was a good learning experience, with Board of Elections Chair Steve Gilbert favorable to it, seeing no serious complications.

Lobbying Services

The Maryland Municipal League and its subsidiary Prince George’s County Municipal Association have discontinued their lobbying services, thus removing the city’s access to information and advocacy concerning legislation at the county and state level. Discussion revealed probable need to enlist a multiprovider approach to cover both county and state, which have their own processes. Salmerón and staff will submit a survey to council to determine the best scope-of-work desired, prior to contracting an advisory entity. Council felt it was possible neighboring municipalities might share in the cost.

Road Resurfacing

Council approved a contract with VMP Construction for road resurfacing on Crescent Road (Lastner to Southway), the Youth Center maintenance road and the Municipal Building and Community Center parking lots for $1 million and miscellaneous concrete work for $150,000. The concrete work should start July 28, with the paving to begin after Labor Day to minimize traffic impact.

Other Expenditures

Council approved the purchase by the Greenbelt Police Department of two Ford Police Interceptor hybrid SUVs and one Chevrolet Blazer EV for $148,045. These are replacement vehicles. Four thousand dollars was approved from the city’s miscellaneous funds to replace the furniture in the Senior Lounge at the Community Center.

Cooling and Warming Centers

Councilmember Jenni Pompi introduced an idea to expand the city’s cooling and warming centers, citing the recent, dangerous heat waves and the inequity in the stations’ locations, with the majority in Greenbelt Center. Council suggested approaching businesses, HOAs and schools for their possible contributions. Salmerón said city shuttles could be enlisted to transport people in need. Salmerón was asked to begin conversations throughout the city to address this issue.

Trump Administration Policies Now Threaten Maryland’s Climate Efforts

by Sam Gauntt

Universities and research institutions across Maryland face extensive funding cuts. Disappearing, too, are federal incentives to move to clean energy sources, as President Donald Trump works to repeal state laws aimed at addressing climate change. Meanwhile, scores of employees at federal environmental agencies, including many from Maryland, have already lost or could soon lose their jobs.

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Brooke Rollins spelled out May 8 on Fox Business news, under the Trump administration, “We’re not doing that climate change, you know, crud anymore.”

Trump has long called climate change “a hoax” and, since returning to office in January, his administration has treated it as such. This about-face in federal climate policy is impacting almost every aspect of efforts to address environmental and climate issues by Maryland and other states across the country.

Climate change experts and state government officials warn these funding cuts and other federal actions could set Maryland’s climate efforts back years.

The changes come at a delicate time for the state’s environment, regardless of the federal government.

The Money

Maryland entered its annual legislative session facing a $3 billion budget deficit, leading Governor Wes Moore to direct the state to cut more than $250 million from its four environmental agencies.

On top of that, the University of Maryland Center for Environmental Science (UMCES) recently downgraded the Chesapeake Bay’s health from a C+ to a C in its annual report card due to worsening weather patterns.

Adam Ortiz, deputy secretary of the Maryland Department of the Environment, said the Trump administration has put the state’s climate, environmental and clean energy projects “on the chopping block.” “The biggest exposure and liability is to everyday people,” he said.

Through July 15, the National Weather Service issued 3,045 flood warnings this year – more than any year in modern history. This summer’s floods range from those that led to a state of emergency in Western Maryland in May to the July 4 torrent in Texas that has claimed more than 130 lives and the recent flash floods that hit the northern D.C. area on July 19 (see page 1 for the report of that flooding in Greenbelt).

The Federal Emergency Management Agency’s decision to cut the disaster mitigation program hasn’t gone unchallenged. On July 16, a coalition of 20 states, including Maryland, filed a lawsuit in federal court disputing the agency’s authority to cut the program without prior approval from Congress and seeking a permanent injunction to restore its funding.

On July 16, Maryland Attorney General Anthony Brown said it is “the worst possible time to cut life-saving disaster preparedness funding.” “Any community in Maryland can be struck by a devastating natural disaster that forever changes the lives of those who live there,” Brown said.

The Trump administration isn’t just cutting flood control funding. Over the last six months, Trump has sought to cancel more than $23.3 billion in clean energy grants nationwide, according to the Climate Program Portal. Trump is also seeking to cut billions in funding for federal environmental agencies, including a roughly $2 billion proposed cut to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) and a proposed almost $5 billion cut to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Because federal agencies are picking up less of the bill, Maryland has been forced to find new ways to generate revenue to cover spending on climate, environmental and energy projects, said Ortiz, the EPA’s former top administrator for the mid-Atlantic region. One way has been by increasing the cost of inspection and enforcement fees that haven’t been raised in decades.

“The state is trying to pick up a lot of the slack, since excluding of certain candidates is a way of implicitly signaling the voter’s ranking of candidates. Ranked choice explicitly allows the expression of preference.

Instant Runoff

There are many ways a ranked choice system can be implemented, and the one under discussion with council is a version commonly known as instant runoff. At a single election, voters rank their choices as they see fit. Ballots are collected and a threshold of victory (as a percentage of votes cast) is determined based on the size of the electorate. For example, if the threshold is 30 percent, a candidate must have 30 percent of the voters pick them as their first choice.

Candidates who reach the threshold of votes win outright in this first round. If no one wins or all seats are not filled, instead of going back to the electorate for a runoff, the candidate who received the fewest votes is eliminated and the already-cast preferences for the remaining candidates are tallied.

The voters whose first-choice candidates were eliminated (either by being elected or eliminated) have their votes redistributed to their respective second choices (there are a number of options for how this is done). The votes are tabulated again and whichever candidates reach the threshold are elected. Rounds continue until all slots are filled. In practice, only a few rounds or a re-establishment of threshold are required to complete the process – and no second election is required, potentially saving time and money.

Visualizing RCV

The League of Women Voters created a helpful graphic, which we modified slightly, to illustrate the decision-making process that goes on with ranked choice voting. The loop through the votes is repeated to work through the preference scores until all seats are filled.

Minnesota and Monotonicity

Linked to the presentation to council is a helpful explanation by Minnesota Public Radio simulating ranked choice voting via instant runoff (youtube.com/watch?v=INxwMdl8OWw). The clip illustrates the process using different-color sticky notes coupled with clear, if simplified, narration but, unlike Greenbelt, fills only one opening.

One issue, however, that came up during the worksession and in the simulation is that in a ranked choice election under certain circumstances, a candidate can be ahead in the first round of voting and still lose, depending exactly how candidates are eliminated and votes are redistributed.

This potential reversal is related to a mathematical property called monotonicity. This means the outcome of a system either stays going in one direction, like an escalator going up (monotonic) or goes up and down like a roller coaster (not monotonic). In a voting system, monotonic would mean that a candidate ahead in one round would continue to be ahead in the next: but RCV systems are not monotonic. (See box).

The lack of monotonicity raises the possibility that a candidate might gain more support depending on which round they make it to and a candidate who was initially ahead could then lose. A community member alluded to Monotonicity is math-speak for “always heading in the same direction.” A monotonic function either gets bigger forever, or smaller forever.

A perfect ranked choice election system, by definition, would be monotonic and not change an individual’s ranking relative to others over the course of the election, i.e., would not allow a previously lower-ranked candidate to overtake a previously higher-ranked candidate in the later rounds. Monotonicity is, therefore, a desired characteristic of election schemes and is described in gory detail at electowiki.org/wiki/Monotonicity.

Plurality voting (what we do now) is monotonic mostly because it’s a one-shot deal (unless you end up with a runoff, where all bets are off).

To achieve monotonicity there are four math-based criteria that must be met and none of the several ranked choice systems available intrinsically meet all four as they play out round by round (none guarantee the outcome of an election doesn’t flip the initial rankings.) Only two of the many possible RCV systems, one being Greenbelt’s proposed instant runoff scheme, innately meet as many as three out of the four criteria, and (in the way of math) it seems impossible that any RCV scheme could meet all four.

this possibility and noted that it could lead some voters, especially those without much experience, to become suspicious of the process and lead to demoralization or even allegations of fraud.

Education, Transparency

There were a number of perspectives voiced during the council worksession but one through-line among proponents and detractors alike is that education and greater transparency must be central to any proposed change to the current system of voting.

Changes proposed, be they to do with the size of districts or the manner of voting, will likely draw different reactions from different groups of voters and community members, and come with complications and nuances not immediately observable to the average person. As such there was consensus in the meeting that such changes should be made as clear as possible and subject to democratic determination.

Franklin Returns to County Council As Chief of Staff for Calvin Hawkins

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Prince George’s County Council Member Jamel “Mel” Franklin suddenly resigned from his At-Large seat on County Council after 14 years in June 2024, shortly before he was charged with felony theft and perjury. He pleaded guilty in August 2024 and, in November 2024, Franklin was sentenced to five years in prison, with all but one year suspended, and three years of supervised probation, for one count of felony theft scheme over $100,000, and five years incarceration, all suspended, for one count of perjury, to run concurrently. He was ordered to pay $133,168.67 in restitution.

At the time of his sentencing, the Office of the Maryland State Prosecutor said that for 2014 to 2023, “Franklin stole at least $133,168.67 from his campaign committee and used those funds to pay for, among other things, international trips, hotels, dinners, cosmetic procedures for himself and a close friend, and personal hotel-stays.”

Franklin was released from jail in June. This week Franklin announced via social media that he has been appointed as Chief of Staff to At-Large Prince George’s County Council Member Calvin Hawkins II.

The Three Brothers Restaurant Chain Sold to Family Buyer

by Cathie Meetre

Three Brothers has been sold. It’s like the ground just shifted a few inches to one side. The News Review went on a site visit (with lasagna) to investigate.

Who Dunit?

The purchaser is a long-time pizza store owner, Reagan Dahl, who recently re-located to this area from the west coast to be near his family. No conglomerates, and, like the Repoles, his family will be involved also. Not only that but an enquiry at the store about the brother who has been running the restaurant in recent years revealed that “Peter isn’t going anywhere for a while” and will facilitate as the new owners pick up the reins. This (hungry) reporter was also reassured that the name will stay the same and all the staff will be kept. “Nothing will change!” said my source, cheerfully.

A Facebook post on July 17 announced the sale, and a call to Jim McGinnis, owner of The Restaurant Brokers who managed the process, confirmed it. McGinnis, with 42 years specializing exclusively in restaurant sales, is delighted with the outcome as he is a lifelong Berwyn Heights resident who has frequented Three Brothers since 1976 when they first opened.

Established 1976

Three Brothers moved its fledgling restaurant to Greenbelt from New York City in 1976, and became a local fixture. Starting as a little hole in the wall at the west end of Beltway Plaza, it was an affordable lunchtime treat and a go-to place for a really yummy pizza. Later it moved to the Roy Rogers location when they left and eventually also took over mall offices behind it, keeping the totally reliable, simple food and the same efficient service style of ordering at the counter (but a lot more places to sit and eat it). No waiters, no starched tablecloths. No fuss.

Food for the Weary

Kids were fed after soccer, football and baseball games and the bar and food became an attractive element for the many sports teams and clubs that met there after a game, an aerobic dance class or swim meet. The menu widened but kept its hearty simplicity. The repertoire was based on family recipes cooked by their Mamma of the eponymous lasagna, Maria Repole, who grew up in Italy where the three brothers were born.

Brotherly Love

Back in the day, all three brothers were a fixture. Peter Repole managed the service upfront to the customers and kept up a steady and rapid pace with orders – collating them, chasing them, making sure they went out looking and tasting just right. Michael provisions of the existing employment agreement.” House will receive a lump sum severance payout equal to 24 months’ salary and any “benefits.” He will additionally receive any unpaid performance bonuses or stipends and any “deferred compensation” and “annuity contributions” due under his contract.

House and his family will continue to receive medical, dental and vision coverage for at least 12 months and contributions to his tax-sheltered retirement account of up to 16 percent of his base salary for six months. He’ll also receive compensation for unused vacation and sick leave and retain the PGCPs owned laptop, mobile phone and iPad.

House’s base salary was $345,000 when he joined PGCPs in 2023 but he received a Cost of Living Adjustment of 2.5 percent annually. Thus, for the last academic year his salary was $353,625, as confirmed by the State of Maryland salary schedule, and the coming year it would have been over $362,465. The Greenbelt News Review calculates the lump sum payout for the final two years of base salary alone, if COLA is factored in, will be equal to $733,992.90.

Interim Superintendent Shawn Joseph joined PGCPs on July 1, with a base salary higher than House’s was projected to reach at $365,000. His appointment was announced the day after House’s separation contract, on Friday, June 13. He was appointed by County Executive Elect Aisha Braveboy, prior to the start of her term on July 1.

House’s separation agreement was effective June 18, and also stipulated a joint public statement, “highlighting accomplishments under Superintendent’s tenure.” The agreement continues, “Under threat of penalty, the parties both individually and collectively shall permanently avoid any adverse communication; both parties agree to refrain from negative comments in public forums, including media, social media platforms, or any format.”

The Greenbelt News Review is appealing PGCPs’ response to our MPIA request which asked for “total compensation paid or owed” not the text of the separation agreement. The News Review has also submitted a second MPIA for the total value of the separation agreement in dollars.

Several Greenbelt parents and residents expressed frustration at the cost to the school system of the separation agreement with House – which is not yet fully known – and the new Interim Superintendent’s salary, particularly at a time when funding for education is a challenge. PGCPs also paid out almost $800,000 to Former Superintendent Kevin Maxwell in a separation agreement it reached with him in 2018. “Every taxpayer in the county has the right to be outraged. So does every single teacher,” said Brooke Kenny, Greenbelt parent of two children in PGCPs.

the federal government has abandoned its support role,” Ortiz said.

The UMCES hasn’t yet lost any grants for which it was the primary recipient, but it has lost some for which it was a co-lead or secondary recipient, said Dave Nemazie, the center’s chief of staff and executive director of government affairs.

More than anything, Nemazie said, UMCES has seen an “overall slowdown” both of getting awards and of communication with federal partners. He said the center, which typically receives about 60 percent of its external funding from the federal government, is facing a 25 percent reduction in grants and awards for the 2026 fiscal year.

“The spigot is not flowing as fast,” he said. “And the communication has been much more complicated than it has in the past.”

Kristin Reilly, director of the Maryland-based Choose Clean Water Coalition, said funding cuts could have a “major impact” on Maryland’s climate restoration efforts. “Pretty much anything that you’re doing at the state level, there is a need for some level of federal investment that’s been counted on, that’s been incorporated and calculated into the state budgets,” she said. “If that isn’t going to continue, we’re going to have to make some really tough choices and have some really serious conversations, especially here in Maryland.”

The Policies

The recently passed “One Big Beautiful Bill Act,” Trump’s signature policy effort, will have broad impacts on climate change and environmental justice funding and programs, too.

The budget reconciliation bill, signed into law by Trump in early July, removed incentives for clean energy, electric vehicles and efficient homes, which the bill describes as “Green New Deal subsidies.”

High water at the spillway on the Lake Saturday evening, shortly after the July 19 storm.

Marisa Olszewski, Maryland League of Conservation Voters’ program manager for environment and community, described the current landscape as an “assault” on clean energy. The U.S. is throwing away its position as a global leader in clean energy, said Olszewski. “Once you pull back on that, it’s not like the rest of the world is going to wait for us to come back around and develop the technology, or put out the research,” she said. “They’re going to go ahead and do it without us.”

Trump’s Actions

Many of Trump’s executive actions have taken aim at clean energy programs.

In April, he signed an executive order titled Protecting American Energy From State Overreach, which ordered the U.S. attorney general to immediately identify and challenge the legality of state climate laws. “Many states have enacted, or are in the process of enacting, burdensome and ideologically motivated ‘climate change’ or energy policies that threaten American energy dominance and our economic and national security,” Trump said.

While that executive order didn’t mention Maryland, it did take issue with a carbon trading program in California that is similar to one formed by a group of states, including Maryland. In addition, the executive order could lead to a federal attack on Maryland’s Climate Solutions Now Act of 2022, which sets statewide greenhouse gas emissions goals, energy efficiency standards for new buildings and other climate-related measures. County-level actions could be challenged, too.

“Should the U.S. attorney general choose to target either the state of Maryland, Maryland’s counties, or both, the effect on Maryland’s energy landscape as well as local control could be dramatic,” Dominic J. Butchko, director of intergovernmental relations at the Maryland Association of Counties, wrote in a blog post shortly after Trump issued that executive order.

Trump signed a different executive order last January, which halted all federal approval of new wind farms, and has sought to roll back or cancel wind energy projects across the country.

While the Maryland Offshore Wind Project located off the coast of Ocean City, one of the state’s signature clean energy projects, had already been approved by the federal government, it too has

Teenager Shot in Edmonston Ct Apartment in Critical Condition

On Tuesday, July 22 at approximately 10 p.m. police were called to the scene of a shooting in the 9100 block of Edmonston Court. An 18-year-old male victim had already been taken to a nearby hospital before police arrived. The victim was in critical but stable condition at press time. Police are investigating.

On July 14, the Emergency Response Teams (ERT) from Greenbelt and Laurel collaborated to execute a residential search warrant in the 7400 block of Frankfort Place. Their investigation successfully led detectives and officers to locate their target, an 18-year-old male from Greenbelt.
The teenager was arrested on a warrant for an armed robbery that had occurred in the city on July 3. On that date, police were called to Edmonston Road at 11:53 p.m. for the report that two males with handguns robbed a victim, taking his phone and wallet, before fleeing in a white car.

and Mario were also frequently in evidence, skillfully spinning pizzas. Together, they must have made a million of them. Three Brothers would always kick in coupons for local celebrations and fundraisers – contributing to the Labor Day Festival and many other local causes and giving discounts to local organizations planning events.

Time Flies
In recent years, Peter has run the show alone. Brothers Michael and Mario died in 2014 and 2020 respectively – and their photographs remain in a place of honor in the Greenbelt store where the boys made so many pizzas together. Murals in the Greenbelt and Laurel stores show a colorful travelogue of the family's migration and their arrival in New York from Italy.

Growth
Since their debut, more Three Brothers restaurants have been added, and there are now 10 restaurants, with seven owned and three operating under license. Greenbelt remains the flagship store. According to McGinnis, Dahl is considering expanding the chain in due course.

Going Forward
Even though we're assured that nothing will change, it's hard to imagine the store without Peter Repole popping out of the back office to cast an eagle eye over the proceedings. He has certainly earned his retirement and Greenbelters will undoubtedly wish him the leisure he so richly deserves – but only when he's got the new people sorted out.
And, Peter, thanks for all the pizza.

Greenbelt Swim Team Places Third in Divisional Championships

On Friday, July 18, Greenbelt Municipal Swim Team members were excitedly decorating their coach's car. On Saturday, July 19, they competed at the Divisional Championships. There the team placed third out of the six teams in Division C.

This Saturday, the swim team will celebrate their hard work and dedication this summer with an end-of-season banquet and annual splash party.

been caught up in administrative hurdles. On July 7, the EPA informed Maryland regulators the state's air quality permit for the project had an error, and ordered them to revise and reissue the permit. The state does not plan to reissue the permit, Maryland Environment Secretary Serena McIlwain wrote in a July 17 letter to the agency.

Federal and state agencies haven't just lost money. They've lost people. Few states are more at risk from the federal government's sweeping layoffs than Maryland, where more than 6 percent of residents are employed by the federal government. Maryland is home to almost 230,000 federal workers, the third-largest number in the U.S. Those workers include scores of scientists, researchers and environmental experts.

NOAA and the Smithsonian Environmental Research Center call Maryland home. Other agencies, including the EPA, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Department of Energy have a sizable presence in the state. These agencies play a key role in helping oversee and fund many of the state's most extensive environmental and climate projects, such as its efforts to restore the Chesapeake Bay. EPA Administrator Lee Zeldin announced in May that the agency will cut staffing levels to those it had during the Ronald Reagan administration in the 1980s. On July 18, EPA announced it would shutter its research and development office and implement a large-scale "reduction in force," which, combined with previous personnel changes, would decrease the agency's workforce by about 23 percent. More than 500 Maryland residents worked for the EPA in 2024, according to data from the federal Office of Personnel Management.

Ortiz said changes in federal departments and agencies will impact Maryland's ability to carry out environmental work, as many of its authorities are delegated to the state by the federal government.

"Often we do need a thumbs up, a nod or an approval to carry out various programs," Ortiz said. "That responsiveness will be slower. Areas that we've been investing in to try to fix long-standing challenges are going to be weakened and slowed because we don't have that partnership."

Some federal cuts targeting environment-focused positions, however, have been overturned in the courts. The administration halted funding to the AmeriCorps program in April, which impacted hundreds of Maryland workers (see our story in the June 12, 2025, issue). But in June, a federal judge in Maryland ordered the Trump administration to reinstate funding for AmeriCorps positions.

Ortiz said the state is working to make "smart and strategic decisions" on how to handle federal cuts and policy changes. But, he added, as state officials make plans, new events are unfolding at "an almost hourly pace." "We want to react, but we also don't want to overreact," he said. "This is uncharted waters. So it's no easy answers, and there's certainly no playbook."

Emerald City Pride Parade, The SPACE's Summer of Pride

by Will Hammann

The Emerald City Pride Parade was held Saturday, July 19, in Greenbelt, celebrating the spirit and contributions of the LGBTQ+ community.

Mayor Emmett Jordan, joined by Carla Gordon, wife of the late Ric Gordon who organized the first Emerald City Parade in 2022, spoke briefly before the parade about Gordon's contributions and the significance of the celebrations.

The parade began at the Gardenway playground, and marched to Roosevelt Center led by Honk! Situation, Greenbelt's New Orleans style street band. Residents were joined by several elected officials such as Jordan, Councilmembers Jenni Pompei, Danielle McKinney and Amy Knesel, Maryland Delegate Ashanti Martinez, Berwyn Heights Mayor Tiffany Papanikolas and New Carrollton Councilmember Briana Urbina.

A festival, part of The SPACE Free Art For All's "Summer of Pride," followed the parade, where a number of organizations, including Maryland Trans Unity, FreeState Justice and The SPACE, set up stands to inform people about various resources.

Shaymar Higgs, founder and executive director of The SPACE, said that he wanted to make Pride festivities last for more than just one month. With so many events in June, "I'm sure people are tapped out, exhausted," Higgs noted.

That's why The SPACE recently has helped organize a number of events including the festival, and will continue doing so in August with Drag Bingo, an adult bonfire night and a panel on supporting neighbors in need on the weekend of August 1, and culminating with a viewing of The Wiz on August 10, where costumes are encouraged.

The SPACE had always been involved since Ric Gordon championed Greenbelt's first parade, but after his death, Higgs was inspired to do even more, recalling that Gordon shared the goal of celebrating Pride past the month of June. "The community does not die out after Pride Day," Higgs said.

"The whole Pride thing, it's not just about the LGBT community, it's about anyone that feels marginalized. It's about creating safe spaces," Higgs said.

County approved erosion and sediment control plan that complies with state and county requirements. "An inspection of the site on Sunday found the required erosion and sediment control measures (i.e., sediment trap, diversion dikes and berms, and silt and super silt fence) to be functioning as designed and the site was found to be in compliance with the approved grading, erosion and sediment control plans," reported Hruby.

The Department of Public Works responded to a tree emergency at the lake where a large tree fell across the path and into the water during the storm. They were able to clear the path so that it was walkable by Sunday morning.

Other Storm Damage
Public Works also responded to a tree emergency on Mandan Road.

However, Hruby said Public Works did not receive any calls regarding flooding following Saturday's storm. The bottom apartments at Parke Crescent, which saw dramatic flooding two years ago, continue to be unoccupied.

Some residents complained online and to neighbors of flooded basements.

In neighboring Berwyn Heights, city officials estimate 2.5 to 4 inches of rain fell in just over an hour on Saturday, which led to flooded roadways and surfaces and the need for "minor water rescues." Those rescues were carried out by the Berwyn Heights fire department, even as they dealt with flooding at their own firehouse.

The Pride parade begins at the Gardenway playground and ends at Roosevelt Center, where the festival will follow.
