In the Spirit of Community: Ceramics in Greenbelt, MD will be exhibited through January 24.

The works of 33 participants in the Greenbelt Recreation Department's Ceramics Program will be shown at the Studio Gallery in Washington, D.C., through January 24. The juried outreach exhibit, "In the Spirit of Community: Ceramics in Greenbelt, MD" includes 43 pieces - wheel-made, hand-built, tile, mosaic, functional and sculptural - and calls attention to the city's founding ethos of a commitment to community.

Greenbelter and current artist in residence, sculptor Christopher Corson, who also sits on the Studio Gallery Board, pitched the idea for the show in late 2024. The gallery, which is the longest running artist-owned gallery in

by Erica Johns

A receptive crowd of approximately 40 Greenbelt Homes Inc. (GHI) court liaisons and others gathered at Sunrise Caribbean Restaurant on the evening of Tuesday, December 30 to prepare for the Save As You Throw trash collection pilot which began Monday, January 5. Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability (Green ACES) Chair John Lippert said the evening's focus was on complex issues not previously discussed.

Attendees included court liaisons; Lippert and other Green ACES and Green Team members; city staff including City Manager Josué Salmerón, Sustainability

Coordinator Luisa Robles and Constituent Services Coordinator Gizelle Alvarez; and City Councilmembers Kristin Weaver, Jenni Pompei and Frankie Fritz.

Setting the Scene

The event began with a buffet meal, during which attendees chatted about trash, recycling and composting among themselves and their courts. Court liaisons share information, help with problems and foster community among GHI neighbors. (The court liaison program restarted in 2025.)

Some of the issues discussed arise from how a new city trash collection rule intersects with an

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Goddard Space Flight Center (GSFC) was home to NASA's largest research library. However, its operations were paused on December 9 for a 60-day review and on January 2 the agency announced it would close the library. Officials' statements claim nothing of importance will be lost and point to digital resources but NASA employees say the loss could be profound. Meanwhile Goddard Engineers, Scientists and Technicians Association (GES-TA), the employee union which had an agreement specifically ensuring the maintenance of the Goddard library, was stripped of recognition by President Trump's Executive Order (EO 14343) excluding NASA from unionization rights to "enhance" national security. Critics of the closure say the administration is taking advantage of the period without

Administrator's View

On January 2, new NASA Administrator Jared Isaacman posted on X that though the physical space is closing this has long been planned and part of consolidation approved in 2022. NASA researchers will continue to have the scientific information and resources they need and the materials will be evaluated,

Celebration: GIVES Turns 30

by Joan Estenson

The year 1995 must have been remarkable because three organizations were born that year: the New Deal Café, Friends of the Greenbelt Library and GIVES, the Greenbelt Intergenerational Volunteer Exchange Service.

The Beginning

Helen Geller, a gerontology student at the University of Maryland (UM), brought the idea of an organization to provide services to the elderly in their homes to the Senior Citizens Advisory Committee, which decided it was not something they could do. This led to the formation of an independent project design committee and affiliation with the existing Cooperative Caring Network for the first three years.

"We spent time trying to figure out what to call the organization. We wanted an easy acronym, one that would tell what the organization does," said former mayor Judith Davis, a charter member and longtime vice president of GIVES.

GIVES began as a time dollar program, based on the work of Edgar Cahn, where service givers earn a credit for each hour they give, with the expectation everyone would offer services of some sort, and credits could be used to "pay" for services received. At first this was closely tracked, but it soon became apparent that some members needed services but were unable to offer any service in return, yet no one on the board wanted to deny needed services on that basis.

Services to be offered in the beginning included transportation,

Letters to the Editor

Thank You To Greenbelt

On December 6, Venturing Crew 746 hosted the 5th Annual Winter Wonderland. We would like to take a moment to thank the following community members and organizations that helped to make the event a success: Greenbelt Rotary, our chartering organization, and Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church, our affiliate organization, for their continued support of the Crew and providing a space to host; Ed’s Tree Service for donating and delivering mulch which helped level the trail and make it safe for our guests; the Greenbelt Police Department for providing an officer and cruiser; the Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department for displaying and giving a sneak peek inside an ambulance and helping Santa make his way to our event to the delight of the children; our stage entertainment – Zookulele, Sam “the Juggler” Collins and our storytellers Kate and Mark Robinson for entertaining us all evening with music, laughs and stories; Town Center Realty and Frann Fendlay for the amazing popcorn; our community groups who created fun booth displays and offered fun activities and swag – the City of Greenbelt Park Rangers, the Greenbelt Municipal Swim Team and The SPACE Free Art for All; the Greenbelt City Council for their support and showing up every year; and to the wonderful community of Greenbelt for supporting a program that helps grow the next generation of leaders through outdoor adventures and skills, community service and trainings.

Liz Murray, Crew 746 Advisor and the adult leaders and youth members of Crew 746

Oppose Law Firm Choice

As Greenbelt residents who support all city workers’ choice to unionize, we are troubled to learn of the city’s longtime use of Jackson Lewis, a law firm that specializes in union-busting – or as their website calls it, “union avoidance.” We would like our tax dollars to go to a firm that can advise the city on how best to negotiate a fair contract with workers, not one intent on preventing workers from exercising their right to form and join a union.

There is also a budgetary concern with Jackson Lewis. Their hourly rate is more than double the rate of other good firms who can advise the city on how to negotiate with employees. In these times of economic concern, why should the City of Greenbelt overpay a firm that cannot advise on a fair approach to negotiations with workers?

The city’s Public Works staff have already voted to unionize and, if we respect these workers, negotiations should not be delayed. A city council vote is required to amend the city charter to allow all workers to choose to unionize, not just the police. Once council makes that important vote, it is critical to have legal representation with experience in coming to the table with workers. We urge the city to terminate its agreement with Jackson Lewis and select a law firm that will help the city negotiate justly with our valued city staff. The fairness promised in our community pledge should apply to workers as well as residents.

The City of Greenbelt exemplifies the Spirit of FDR’s New Deal – “no ordinary time” – when government looked out for the little guy, bolstering labor rights by enacting the Wagner Act (1935) and the Fair Labor Standards Act (1938). The city can affirm this spirit by amending the charter, hiring a new law firm and coming to the bargaining table with a commitment to fairness and gratitude toward city workers.

The Secret Agent

Brazil, 1977. Marcelo, a technology expert in his early 40s, is on the run. Hoping to reunite with his son, he travels to Recife during Carnival but soon realizes that the city is not the safe haven he was expecting. Winner of Best Director and Best Actor in Cannes and three Golden Globes: Best Screenplay, Best Actor and Best Motion Picture. Said critic Mitchell Beaupre of The Film Stage, “Mixing a sort of arthouse character study with searing socio-political drama and paranoia thriller, The Secret Agent reverberates in the mind for days after watching.”

Marty Supreme

Marty Mauser (Timoth   Chalamet), a young man with a dream no one respects, goes to hell and back in pursuit of greatness. Also starring Josh Safdie, Gwyneth Paltrow and Odessa A’zion. Chalamet trained in table tennis for about seven years to prepare for his role in the movie, traveling with a table while he worked on other films. “Featuring a bracingly energetic performance from Chalamet that is his career best, Marty Supreme, a story of ambition, fame, cultural identity and the American Dream, is as good a Christmas present as Hollywood could give us in these fractious times,” said critic Cary Darling of the Houston Chronicle.

Obituaries

Martina Darragh

Martina Darragh, mother, sister, wife and a poet died, at age 74, on November 18, 2025, at Hillhaven Sterling Care nursing facility after several years of living with Alzheimer's disease. Tina was the eldest of seven children of Margaret and Kim Darragh, born in 1950. She grew up in McDonald, Pa., attending Canevin High School, Washington Trinity University in D.C. and University of Maryland. Tina was a well-respected and innovative poet whose work from 1974-2017 is housed at the Special Collections Research Center at George Washington University. She worked for many years as a research librarian at the Georgetown University Bioethics Research Library. Tina preferred to be known for mentoring and encouraging younger writers, poets and students which may indeed be her lasting legacy. Tina married fellow poet Peter Inman in 1976, and they spent the majority of their lives in Greenbelt. She has one son, Darragh (Jack) Inman, who survives her, and she is survived by three sisters and three brothers, Mimi, Cora, Mary, Peter, Luke and Paul, and two grandchildren, Ali and McKayla. Tina leaves behind many nieces, nephews, cousins and dear friends.

A funeral mass will be held at St. Isidore the Farmer Parish, St. Alphonsus Church in McDonald, Pa., on Saturday, January 17. A private family burial service will be held on Monday, January 19 at Resurrection Cemetery.

A separate celebration of life service will be scheduled in Washington, D.C., at the end of February or early March for the vibrant poetry community she leaves behind.

Donations can be made in Tina's memory to the Alzheimer's Association and/or Foundation or the City of Greenbelt Animal Shelter.

STORM

Ready for Adoption? Call (301) 474-6124

She might look like a wild savannah cat, but 1-year-old Storm is perfectly domesticated! We think Storm is a Bengal/mix cat, a breed known for its striking fur coat and playful personality. Storm was found as a stray, so we don't know her true lineage – but she's a 100% good girl! Unfortunately, Storm has FeLV (feline leukemia virus), which affects her immune system but is not contagious to humans or other species of animals. However, she may be contagious to other cats so she will need a home without other cats (or with cats already FeLV+).

If you're interested in adopting Stellar Storm, please reach out to us at animalservices@greenbeltnmd.gov or call us at (301) 474-6124.

existing GHI trash storage rule. GHI requires storing cans in closets or enclosures. Beginning this month, city waste collectors will no longer remove trash from those spaces, instead requiring GHI residents to move trash to a visible location for collection, and newly enforcing an existing city rule to place trash bags in tightly-lidded cans. Some GHI residents aren't physically capable of moving cans from closets/enclosures, and some GHI residents who didn't previously use cans must purchase cans.

Challenging Trash Enclosures

Court liaison Jan Wolf and Green Team member Susan Barnett mentioned enclosures whose design allows trash can removal only by lifting straight up, instead of safe lifting by squatting to reduce the risk of back injury.

Robles acknowledged the issue, saying she was aware of only two such enclosures within GHI. Robles said the city will work with residents with such enclosures. There is an on-premises collection request form on the SAYT webpage. (See box.)

Exemptions

Court liaison and News Review member Carol Griffith asked about the status of on-premises collection requests from residents. (Residents physically unable to remove cans from GHI enclosures or closets, or to single family home curbs, may request an exemption from doing so.) Robles said she was currently aware of five requests, two of which were ineligible because one contained no justification and the other had a household member able to move the can.

Residents don't have to describe their limitation, but they do need to attest to a physical limitation preventing them from placing trash and recycling outside enclosures/closets or at single family home curbs. They must also attest there is no other physically capable person in the household, and provide copies of the requestor's ID, and either their handicapped parking tag or a physician's note confirming the limitation. They can provide these items via the SAYT webpage form, or in person at Public Works or by mailing them there. Robles said she has printed and taken forms to residents without computers.

Those with a temporary physical limitation, such as after surgery, may also request on-premises collection, said Weaver.

Disabled, Other

Lore Rosenthal said she is co-

A trash can and recycling bin at a Research Road GHI home on Tuesday, January 6

ordinating with the Golden Age Club and the Greenbelt Intergenerational Volunteer Exchange Service (GIVES) to provide information and support for members to integrate SAYT with independent living in their own homes.

Court liaison Diana Rutherford suggested large print versions of the city flyers that review what items are and are not recyclable or compostable, because every resident may not be able to use city webpages with the flyers. Robles planned to act on the suggestion. (See box.)

Several attendees raised the sensitive issue of residents with memory challenges who may find it difficult to follow SAYT rules. Rosenthal said Max Trash stickers may be a simple approach for some to begin with. Another concern was people working to address hoarding by removing many bags of items from homes. In response, some suggested using bulk trash or taking bags to workplaces - if the workplace allows that.

Salmerón emphasized the availability of city services to help residents with dementia, hoarding and other challenges, including helping disabled and elderly residents stay in their homes. Alvarez can connect residents to city staff from Greenbelt Assistance in Living (GAIL) and CARES, who can partner with residents, families, court liaisons and neighbors. (See box.)

Cans to Fit Trash Closets

Among GHI residents purchasing trash cans for the first time, some with smaller trash closets are having difficulty finding small enough cans. Salmerón told attendees the city will purchase cans in bulk for small closets, after determining the correct size and needed quantity. He asked GHI residents with smaller closets to provide their closet width and depth, name, address and contact information to Robles and Alvarez. Wolf suggested that smaller hardware stores such as Ace and Strosnider's may have more choices than big box stores or online vendors.

Multifamily Homes

Bob Cahalan spoke about choosing between SAYT bags or Max Trash stickers in multifamily households, such as where parents live on one floor and an adult child's family on another. Assuming such homes receive one trash bill, and are thus eligible for one Max Trash sticker and up to 99 gallons of trash weekly, Lippert said using SAYT bags would be best. This allows each family to choose how to pay for the trash they produce.

Ask for Help Soon

During the SAYT pilot's first two weeks, January 5 to 17, residents can familiarize themselves with its operation without penalty. In the first week, households using neither SAYT bags nor Max Trash stickers will receive a warning notice and their trash will be collected. If the behavior recurs in the second week, the household will receive a warning notice and their trash will not be collected. In the third week, warning notices will change to fines and trash will not be collected.

Robles encourages households with particular challenges to contact the city as soon as possible, especially during the first two weeks. She told the News Review that Public Works is available to make site visits to help residents devise solutions, whether for a problem enclosure, physical limitations or how to recycle more. She advised contacting Public Works Director Brian Kim, Refuse/Recycling Supervisor Michael Barnes and herself. (See box.)

Greenbelter Competes In National Pageant

She also highlighted her personal platform, Big Sis, dedicated to uplifting and supporting eldest daughters.

Akowe described the experience as one of the most meaningful achievements of her year and said she is proud to have carried the name of Greenbelt throughout her journey. Her participation highlights the dedication, talent and community spirit of local youth.

Grab & Go Breakfasts Support Students Amid Uncertainties

by Marilyn Phan

Every ERHS student can receive free breakfast and is permitted to eat their breakfast in their first period classroom.

The government shutdown delayed the November 2025 Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits to recipients, with some states making partial payments during the lapse. December saw a return to a normal payment schedule. In Fiscal Year (FY) 2024 there were on average 42 million people receiving benefits, approximately 12 percent of the nation's population. In Maryland during FY 2024 some 694,000 people received benefits. Grab & Go breakfast programs are an effort to expand school breakfast for eligible students in Maryland and is an alternative service method to traditional breakfast served in the cafeteria. Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) Principal Dr. Portia Barnes announced ERHS' participation in the Grab & Go breakfast program, providing free breakfast for students starting October 24, 2025. At least 40 percent of ERHS students are on free or reduced cost meals. "During these difficult times, it was imperative that we opt for this program to support our ERHS families," said Kimberly Ford, an ERHS administrator. The Maryland Meals for Achievement program (MMFA) provides funds for schools to support students' nutrition needs in preparation for classroom learning. MMFA currently supports 581 schools throughout the state. Its ongoing efforts to financially support the breakfast program have been praised for encouraging students to start their days with a nutritious breakfast, which in turn increases student attendance and academic performance in school. The program not only allows every student to receive free breakfast but it grants them permission to eat their breakfast in their first period classrooms. Although the Grab & Go breakfast program is only approved under the current 2025-2026 school year, school administration hopes to ensure that ERHS will continue its participation in the program next year. So far, students and parents have been appreciative of the breakfast program. One ERHS student reported that their family's recent change in budget has led them to shop for groceries differently, prioritizing absolute necessities and budget-friendly items. A student notes that, to improve students' experiences in the program, "students should be able to take home the rest of the uneaten breakfast food at the end of the day to prevent excess food waste." There also appears to be a high preference for food variety such as more fruits and options for lactose-intolerant students. One ERHS student reports that the SNAP and the Grab

AT&T and Human I-T provided the organization Community Youth Advance with 200 refurbished laptops to distribute to students in Prince George's County who have limited access to technology. The computers, funded by an AT&T contribution, were given during a special event in mid-December at Greenbelt Middle School. The first distribution occurred previously at G. James Gholson Middle School in Landover. Additional distribution events will be held at two other schools in early January: William Wirt Middle School in Riverdale and Largo High School in Upper Marlboro. "A laptop in the hands of a motivated middle school scholar is a powerful catalyst. It doesn't just assist them with completing assignments; it unlocks their full potential for digital literacy, creativity and critical thinking. The value of this connection to the digital world - and the opportunities it creates for this young scholar - is truly immeasurable," said Terra Harris, executive director, Community Youth Advance. "AT&T is proud to continue to collaborate with organizations like Community Youth Advance to help close the digital divide in Prince George's County," said Katie McEvoy, regional director of External Affairs, AT&T Maryland and Delaware. This information is from a press release issued by Karen Twomey, lead public relations manager for AT&T Corporate Communications.

digitized and transferred to other libraries or “otherwise preserved for historical purposes.” However, those on site paint a different picture, alleging that they have been denied the chance to lobby for the preservation of the material they need, refused the opportunity to bring in subject-area specialists to speak to librarians about items and documents of importance to their missions and they’ve been told that digitization is too costly. Two Goddard employees who spoke separately to the News Review said they are told only 10 to 15 percent of the library’s documents will be preserved.

The News Review asked Goddard’s News Chief Rob Garner if he could tell us what percentage of the library’s holdings will be preserved through digitization, if he could speak to whether that had been deemed too costly and if subject-matter experts were involved in the review. We also asked if Goddard has data about how much the library was being utilized by Goddard employees prior to its closure for 60-day review. Garner responded, “At this time, we’re directing inquiries on the library to Administrator Isaacman’s post on X.”

Agreement with Unioin

Almost 15 years ago, in October 2011, leaders attempted to close the Goddard library and “transition to electronic services.” However, in April 2012 GESTA filed an Unfair Labor Practice Charge and in October 2012 NASA agreed to reopen and maintain the Goddard library, ensure employees have access during their workday and to give written notification of any proposed changes or decisions impacting it to the union. Though Isaacman’s statement says the closure was approved in 2022, the union, which was only suspended in August 2025, had never been notified of this. The library is housed in Building 21, which is not one of the buildings slated for closure in the master plan for Goddard that was released in 2022.

Significance of Closure

The loss of a physical library doesn’t signal modernization or an era of digital access to resources, complained employees we spoke with. In fact, their access to online journals and research has been reduced in recent years, said two. “They’re cutting/unsubscribing from scientific journals, and have done since the start of [last] year, so we cannot read scientific journal articles online from places like SPIE or IEEE,” said K, a co-op scientist. About accessing the library’s resources online going forward, K reported that officials who were asked about digitization responded that it is “just too expensive.” “This is just another step in the path Goddard has been walking [for a] year: reduce capacity, reduce capability, reduce costs or expenses,” said K. Those in charge have said they’ll only subscribe to the most used journals but some subscriptions were cancelled last year without notifying the users, he said. “One can imagine that aerospace engineers want to read different journals than heliophysicists but that they might both be working on the same space telescope project,” he said. As a co-op scientist, K has access to journals through the university he is affiliated with. It’s much harder for his civil servant colleagues, he said, who ask him to get articles for them or ask the GSFC librarians to get copies from elsewhere, which can take days. “Sometimes, when you are doing research, you think a particular article is what you need, but then you read it and realize it isn’t. Normally that’s a 20-, 30-, 40-minute exercise,” said K, “now ... that could take days.” Though K isn’t as impacted because he has other access routes, it’s still more time consuming and inconvenient and involves him switching VPNs, for example.

Access to Resources

A civil servant we spoke with said he needed to consult the library regularly, using journals and historic papers in his research. Some are rare and only at the Goddard Library and others can be accessed through mechanisms like interlibrary loan but that adds unreasonable delay for those working to tight flight deadlines, he said. At one point Goddard employees had access to University of Maryland online resources, including journals, but that arrangement ended some time ago, said the civil servant, leaving Goddard more heavily reliant on their own library and subscriptions. Historic documents are important, he explained, because some of their work involves drawing on technology and work that hasn’t been done since the space race, for example. When there are decades between missions, when analog technologies of the past can be used in space, the library offers an invaluable repository of questions and findings from those who worked on similar problems decades ago.

The civil servant we spoke with says their request for subject-matter experts to be consulted as library materials are assessed was rejected. Librarians are currently making the call on what to keep, he said. Ninety percent of the holdings of the library are being excessed, he was told, and it was even suggested that the engineers and scientists might be able to purchase the materials they want if they’re auctioned off. Fortunately, there’s a repository of journals and research nearby at the University of Maryland, but he says there isn’t time during his workday to drive there, and he knows he won’t be paid for his time at the university library to research and scan or print documents as a member of the public at the weekend.

NASA scientists will suffer even more from the loss of the library, said the civil servant. The scientists are at least partially funded by grants and deeply involved in cutting edge research. They’re expected to regularly publish in journals that they’re losing ready access to as the library closes.

Senator’s Concern

Senator Chris Van Hollen, ranking member on the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies, expressed concern for Goddard to the News Review on Tuesday. “Given that the Trump Administration spent the last year attacking NASA Goddard and its workforce, I remain deeply concerned that their consolidation efforts will hamper NASA’s ability to explore space, deepen our understanding of earth and spur technological advancements that make our economy stronger and nation safer. It’s critical that NASA employees retain access to the research materials they need to conduct their important work. I will continue to closely monitor the actions this Administration is taking to determine whether Goddard’s dedicated scientists and researchers have the materials they need to fulfill their critical mission,” said Van Hollen.

2026 Sees Two Shootings Already; NYE Gunfire Pierces GHI Homes

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

Around 12:45 a.m. on January 1, gunshots were fired in the area of University Square Apartments on Westway. According to residents, multiple shots were fired and bullets pierced the windows at two GHI homes in the 8 Court of Ridge Road. There were no injuries despite one resident being in the living room as a bullet entered and a total of three windows being shot. The shots may have been fired as part of a New Year's celebration, speculated a resident. They were possibly fired by folks intending to aim skyward. The police classified the incident as vandalism.

At approximately 6 p.m. on Monday, January 5, a non-contact shooting was reported in the 6000 block of Greenbelt

Road. There were no injuries reported. Police had a description of the suspect - a man with a beard wearing dark jeans, a coat and white hoodie. Officers were on the scene investigating Monday evening.

Several shootings over recent months have injured and even killed victims in Greenbelt, primarily occurring in the area of Franklin Park. The youngest to lose his life to gunfire in recent months was 14-year-old Carlin Bayong. In those instances, the shootings were targeted, said police.

The penetration of gunfire into neighboring homes at the start of the New Year demonstrates the danger to the community at large, even when no one is targeted.

Mishkan Torah Hosts Seminar On Preventing Gun Violence

by Mary Moien and Marsha Goldberger

In November, the Mishkan Torah Synagogue Sisterhood and Social Action Committee presented a seminar on Preventing Gun Violence - What We Each Can Do. The seminar featured presentations by the Prince George's County Chapter of Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense, Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg School of Public Health Center for Gun Violence Solutions and the Washington, D.C.-area Interfaith Gun Violence Prevention Network.

Johns Hopkins Center

Joshua Horowitz of the Johns Hopkins Center for Gun Violence Solutions discussed the current state of gun violence and the impact it has on victims, their families and communities and society at large. In 2023 there were nearly 47,000 firearm deaths in the United States. Many people are not aware of the fact that nearly six out of 10 of these gun deaths are suicides.

In the Center, analysts are using objective and nonpartisan research to inform policy that leads to legislation and the implementation of practical solutions. Firearm deaths are a public health emergency. Gun deaths, including suicides, surged during the pandemic but have dropped in Maryland over the past couple of years. Horowitz feels that efforts are working and progress is being made. But he emphasized that the U.S. gun culture is a choice our society makes, one we can choose to change.

Advocacy in Maryland is making a difference. State gun laws make a big difference. Although it may seem like Maryland has a high gun death rate, the state's rate actually falls in the middle of the rest of the country. Mississippi has the highest gun death rate and the fewest gun laws. States with more gun limitations have fewer deaths. So the death rate is not inevitable. Horowitz mentioned that there are five major ways that gun laws and other actions save lives: 1) licensure to purchase a gun, 2) firearm removal laws, 3) safe and secure storage, 4) community violence intervention and 5) limiting guns in public. Advocacy plays a role in each of these actions. For more information, visit publichealth.jhu.edu/center-for-gun-violence-solutions.

Advocacy Day in Annapolis Moms Demand Action

Maryland Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense will hold its annual Advocacy Day this year on Thursday, February 5 with the Maryland legislature. They will rally in Annapolis at Lawyer's Mall at 9 a.m. and meet with District 22 legislators from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Note that all-day attendance is not required. Cindy Nell, Prince George's County lead for Moms Demand Action said that the grassroots organization formed in 2012 after the Sandy Hook massacre. There are over 11 million volunteers nationwide (not all are moms), and it uses a multipronged approach to fight gun violence. Last year, the group had 400 people at the Advocacy Day rally in Annapolis and they hope for an even larger turnout this February 5. For more information on Advocacy Day, visit act.everytown.org/event/moms-demand-action-event/73530 or contact Nell at Nellpartyof4@gmail.com.

implemented the superintendent’s “priorities and initiatives,” according to the ethics committee letter.

In a prepared statement Tuesday, December 16, Joseph thanked Watson, whose “knowledge of our district and Maryland’s legislative landscape” helped his transition into the superintendent’s job.

“Senator Watson accepted a short-term assignment and answered the call of duty to serve our students and staff,” Joseph’s statement said. “We also recognize his greater duty – representing the people of Maryland as the elected senator for District 23 – and appreciate his continued advocacy for Prince George’s County.”

Watson was still listed on the school system’s website as an interim senior adviser to the superintendent on the afternoon of December 15, but that page had been taken down by that evening.

Deadra Daly, the legislature’s ethics counsel, is not authorized to speak publicly about specific ethics cases, but said the committee generally expects a “prompt and quick response,” after a letter is issued to a lawmaker. Some time is allotted, however, for lawmakers to make any necessary changes.

“The committee recognizes that, as a member, you’ve got to weigh your options,” Daly said. “The committee usually asks the member: ‘Hey, you need to make a decision, and we’re going to follow up in a couple weeks.’ The committee is not going to say: ‘You got my letter today. Clean out your office in five minutes.’”

There are some exceptions in state law, allowing certain lawmakers to hold secondary jobs with state or local governments, Daly said. For example, lawmakers who held a government job before they filed for election are allowed to keep such positions.

Additionally, lawmakers may work as “a nonelected law enforcement officer or a fire or rescue squad worker” without needing approval from the ethics committee, according to the state ethics guide.

The committee can also grant exemptions for teaching positions, for “human services” positions such as social worker, and for positions that are subject to a standardized “merit system hiring process,” according to the ethics guide. The panel can also approve logical promotions or career changes for elected officials who held their government job before their election.

“A member should contact the Ethics Committee before accepting employment that requires an exemption,” reads the guide.

Handling lawmakers’ secondary jobs, said Daly, is “always a balancing act.”

“We’re a citizen legislature, and we think that’s helpful because we think people have real-world experience they can apply, and we can get better work product.”

But problems arise when legislators could benefit from holding a particular job and being a member of the General Assembly at the same time, according to Daly. “When we look at local governments, the General Assembly provides substantial funding, the General Assembly makes decisions on bills that would impact them,” Daly said. “There is that inherent tension, and those government entities are substantially reliant on the goodwill of the General Assembly.”

[Editor’s Note: Watkin’s resignation from his county employment comes as State Senator C. Anthony Muse (D-Prince George’s) is fighting to keep his $180,000-a-year job in the Prince George’s County’s procurement office despite the Joint Committee on Legislative Ethics finding it unlawful.]

& Go breakfast programs allow them to “have a better sense of well-being and provide necessary nutrients to fuel [their] minds for school.” Research shared by the USDA shows that eating breakfast at school results in fewer visits to the school nurse, encourages healthy eating habits and maintains a healthy weight. The program saves parents about $35 a month for each child, Ford said. This is a significant benefit, especially for low-income families suffering from food insecurity.

It Yourself Machine Gun Bill. Currently, a small piece can be purchased and used to change a regular gun into a machine gun. This new law would outlaw that change. California has already passed such a law and it is under discussion in Illinois. The group is also working to elect people who support sane gun laws.

Nell also recommends that parents ask the parents of their children’s friends whether they have guns in their houses and whether they are kept secure. Moms Demand Action is part of Everytown for Gun Safety. Visit everytown.org for more information.

Interfaith Network

Chris Files represented the Interfaith Gun Violence Prevention Network, of which Mishkan Torah and other D.C.-area religious organizations are members. She stated that a current focus of the network is on gun culture, including gun stores and gun shows. This network has produced a Tool Kit that serves as a practical, helpful guide to educate, engage and activate faith organizations and individuals in reducing gun violence. Washington, D.C., reaches out each January to groups who do not normally show in venues like theirs. Corson told the gallery about the incredible community ceramics program in Greenbelt and asked if they'd consider an exhibit of some of the great pieces created by Greenbelt residents, for whom ceramics is a passion but not a profession. Says Corson, "I am so happy that the world will see how remarkable the Greenbelt community program is."

It is significant that this is a juried event, said Julie Boynton, one of the participants, who submitted several pieces for consideration in the show of which one was selected. She is excited to be part of the exclusive show and to receive feedback on her work from someone who is not a family member or friend. Another Greenbelt ceramicist, Lola Skolnik agreed. "It's an honor to be included," said Skolnik. Corson helped guide the Greenbelt ceramicists who wished to apply to the show, helping them submit professional photos of their pieces. Juror and Curator Mary Welch Higgins did a great job, says Boynton. Higgins will give a Juror/Curator talk during the opening reception this weekend. The Greenbelt exhibit will run until January 24 and ceramicists will have the opportunity to share their work with the public. Though some of the pieces will be for sale, "this is not necessarily about selling for many of the artists, it is about being selected and included in a real gallery show," Boynton told the News Review. The experience of walking through the gallery and being alongside so many great pieces is really meaningful for her.

The show's Opening Reception is on Saturday, January 10, from 4 to 6 p.m. The Juror/Curator's talk by Higgins will be at 4:30 p.m. All are welcome to visit the Studio Gallery at 2108 R St. NW, Washington, D.C., which is open Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from 1 to 6 p.m. and Saturdays 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. One can see all the pieces included in the Greenbelt show on the gallery's website at studiogallerydc.com/in-the-spirit-of-community-ceramics-in-greenbelt-md-catalogue.

laundry, letter writing, reading, minor home repairs, pet sitting, sewing and mending, shopping and errands, telephone reassurance, visiting, gardening and yard work, light housework, respite care, meal preparation and delivery, closet cleaning, and packing and moving help.

Award for Excellence

In 1998 the Maryland Municipal League gave GIVES its Award for Excellence, recognizing the quality and variety of services offered. Its organizational structure was cited as being a model that could be replicated in other cities. Greenbelt beat 15 other municipalities with a population of 10,000 and above to win the honor.

Then-city manager Michael McLaughlin described GIVES "as an example of Greenbelt residents working together to ensure that their neighbors' quality of life does not diminish when they are elderly or disabled." He added, "Advantages of this program are a fostering of independence [and a] promoting of camaraderie and community spirit."

Changes Along the Way

GIVES began with a board of directors and an advisory board, both with members drawn from residents from all over the city; city, county and state elected officials; city employees; city organizations; and local churches. There is no longer an advisory board.

At first volunteers staffed the office for two hours each weekday morning but that expanded to the current practice of four hours, from 10 a.m. to noon and 1 to 3 p.m. each weekday.

Services offered were gradually eliminated when there weren't people who had the skills or the availability to provide them. Covid finally ended other services because GIVES stopped sending volunteers into people's homes, said Carol Drees, president at the time. Throughout its history the greatest demand is for rides to appointments and to do errands. Current services also include friendly visits, to allow the principal caregiver time away, and occasionally pet care.

"The intergenerationality has been the hardest thing to achieve," Davis said. With adult supervision, children and teens raked leaves for GIVES members, including Brownies and fathers and teachers with students from Eleanor Roosevelt High School and eighth graders from the former St. Hugh of Grenoble Catholic School. The students earned community service credits. This was a way to fulfill the intergenerational aspect of GIVES, although there were never enough volunteers to fulfill all the raking requests and the service has not been offered recently.

Volunteers

Former GIVES president Jean Cook said in the 50+ years she's lived here she has been grateful that Greenbelt residents reach out to each other, "and I'm grateful for that now for me, since I no longer drive."

A challenge in any volunteer organization is having people step up when something needs doing. Just ask Cook, president for 11 years. One day when Drees was in the office, Cook asked her if she would take over as president. When Drees declined, "I got on my knees and said, 'oh please oh please oh please, we have to keep this going." Cook said. While the term was for two years, Drees agreed to serve for one and recruited Carol Shaw as vice president, to take over as president the following year.

Cook, Drees and Shaw became aware of a UM program which would assign business students to evaluate a program for a semester. At the time finding a volunteer meant a time-consuming process of telephoning volunteers until one agreed to fulfill the service request. The business student report said the organization had to get online or it would die. Then-city manager Nicole Ard made the connection to the Jewish Council for the Aging (JCA) which had a grant to assist senior villages, and GIVES qualified. Shaw said JCA "provides marketing assistance, the software for scheduling and training for drivers." The training covers legal liability, ethics and how to treat people with special needs, Shaw said.

City Support

The city provides office space, insurance, internet access and equipment, including a telephone, computer and printer. This support means that members pay no dues and nothing for services, unlike similar programs in neighboring cities.

Other financial support comes from donations, in-kind contributions, grants and fundraising.

Community Involvement

GIVES volunteers staff booths at the Labor Day Festival Information Day, and in some years have participated in the parade. GIVES also participated in the Healing Hands commemoration of 9/11 held in Roosevelt Center in 2005, sponsored by Greenbelt Interfaith Leadership Association.

GIVES has sponsored AARP's 55 Alive driving classes and also a CPR class. For over 10 years, until Covid, GIVES coordinated AARP's tax preparation assistance in Greenbelt. That service will begin again during 2026.

It was a long birth process and there have been adaptations along the way, but GIVES still serves Greenbelt well.
